DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

In 1867 Fort Harker was laid out on open prairie about one mile north of the Smoky Hill river. The buildings were constructed around a central parade ground 252 by 120 yards. Two of the three surviving quarters were at the eastern extremity of the north side of the parade ground, and the third, the commanding officer's quarters, was at the northern end of the east side. The three buildings are today in a tree-lined residential neighborhood on Ohio street just west of the Kanopolis business district.

Fort Harker was laid out in 1867 according to the magnetic north pole, but the town of Kanopolis was platted according to the true north pole. The three buildings differ from other structures in the town in that they do not sit parallel to the present streets but at approximately 13 degree angles.

(The officers' quarters are located two blocks east of the surviving Fort Harker guardhouse, which was entered on the National Register in 1972, and consideration was given to expanding that nomination form into a district including the three quarters. However, between the quarters and the guardhouse are four houses and the American Legion building. The decision was therefore made to prepare a separate nomination form.)

All three buildings are of native brown sandstone quarried approximately two miles northeast of the fort site. The stone is laid in regular horizontal courses. All buildings have modifications and additions.

The commanding officer's quarters, situated on the south side of Ohio street, was a T-shaped structure with eight rooms and a kitchen. Facing west-northwest, it measures approximately 103 feet long and 28 feet wide, and the off-set extension to the east measures 49 feet by 28 feet. Dimensions include the original open and closed porches. A second story of frame construction was added to the north end of the main section in 1913, and a frame shed has been added at the south end. To the west of the structure is a wide spacious yard which was originally part of the fort's parade grounds.

The other quarters are located to the north and west on the north side of Ohio street facing a south-southwesterly direction. The two buildings each had four rooms and a kitchen and were intended as one-family dwellings, although two families were sometimes forced to share the facilities.

The exterior of the east quarters has been plastered over, except for the west end, with vertical and horizontal markings in the plaster creating a cement block-like effect. The "T" has been extended to the north and the northwest corner of the "T" has been filled in by another addition. A small addition has also been placed at the northeast part of the "T".

The west quarters has had two small frame additions, one on either side of the "T".

In spite of the additions the buildings give evidence of their original appearance and are readily identifiable for what they were.

Fort Harker was one of three forts (Harker, Hays and Wallace) established along the Smoky Hill river valley to guard the route to Denver, which passed through the part of Kansas most susceptible to Indian raids. Harker was also a link in the military trail from Fort Leavenworth to Forts Riley, Harker, Zarah, Larned and the Southwest.

Fort Harker was originally founded in June, 1864, as Fort Ellsworth. In November, 1866, the name was changed to Harker in honor of Brig. Gen. Charles G. H. Harker of the Ninth U. S. Infantry, killed in June, 1864, at the Battle of Kennesaw Mountain, Georgia. The fort was relocated about three-fourths mile east in January, 1867

The relocation was made as soon as quarters for the men were ready. The officers' quarters were not yet completed and they had to commute daily from the old location for some time. Buildings at the new site were mainly of frame construction although there were five buildings of native sandstone: the hospital, guardhouse, commanding officer's quarters and two other officers' quarters.

Fort Harker, along with many other Kansas towns and military outposts was hard hit by cholera in 1867. It was estimated that 200 deaths occurred at the post and among the neighboring Ellsworth county settlers.

Fort Harker's history was brief but significant. It provided protection for the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, Eastern Division. A depot of the Quartermaster's and Commissary Department was established there in 1867 and in 1867-1868 all the military posts on the Arkansas river and many in Colorado and New Mexico were supplied from Harker. For a time, until the Union Pacific tracks were laid farther to the west, Harker was a main shipping point for the Santa Fe trade. Goods were shipped there by rail and then on to Santa Fe by wagon train. It was at Harker in the fall of 1868 that Gen. Phil Sheridan planned his winter campaign of 1868-1869 which finally subdued the southern Indians. Harker also had a large, well-equipped hospital and the sick from commands in the vicinity were often sent there for treatment.

Among the famous who quartered or camped at Harker, according to Major Henry Inman who was stationed there, were "Generals Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, Harney, Terry, Howard, Schofield, Marcy, Miles, Grierson, Custer, A. J. Smith and Sully." Inman also reported that many great chiefs of the Plains Indian tribes met there to confer with

	Harker was abandoned by the army on Oct its usefulness. It was reoccupied temp of 1872-1873 by a detachment of the Sixth U. S. Cavalry, but they left in early April, 1873. On February 11, 1876, the Kansas house of representatives approved a resolution asking Congress to donate the Fort Harker military reser-a resolution asking Congress to donate the Fort Harker military reservation, 16 square miles, to the state of Kansas. The request was not granted and the reservation was opened to settlement by the act of June 15, 1880.

Some of the buildings of the fort were soon acquired by a Dr. Hodge and in August, 1881, sold to Col. Henry Johnson for $4,177.50. The Salina Herald account of the sale stated that Johnson planned to acquire the rest of the buildings and establish a town.

In 1885 Johnson sold 4,740 acres, including the buildings of Fort Harker, to a Springfield, Ohio, syndicate headed by John H. Thomas for $71,200. Johnson retained the use of the headquarters until April 1, 1886.

Apparently some of the buildings had been dismantled at least partially by the military before 1880, and an 1883 account reported that Johnson was dismantling others and selling the material to settlers for building. Standing in 1883 were the stone officers' quarters, some of the barracks, the guardhouse and the stables.

The present town of Kanopolis, which is situated on the old fort site, was established in 1887. Four of the 1867 fort structures still stand: the guardhouse, which was previously entered on the Register, the commanding officer's quarters and two other officers' quarters. The three extant quarters have now served as private residences for around 90 years.

The existing officers' quarters are significant to the history of Kansas because of the role of Fort Harker in protecting and providing a sense of security to travelers and railroad workers and to the settlers flocking into central Kansas.
