DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Prospect Hill is located on the east side of Kane's Road northeast of Long Green, Maryland. The two-and-a-half story brick house is three bays long on the north (entrance) facade and four bays long on the south. The brick is laid in common bond and is not carefully pointed. Originally the house was covered with stucco which the present owner removed.

The centrally placed double door on the north facade has a semi-circular leaded fanlight. Two pilasters flank the door and support a wooden arch over the fanlight. A pair of rectangular, leaded sidelights are located near the door. The entrance porch has a round arch within the pediment which is supported by two pairs of columns. On the south facade a one-story porch runs the length of the building. Access to the porch is gained through a jib door. There is an enclosed chimney on both the east and west gable ends. A semi-circular, leaded window is located in the center of the west facade at the attic level. The windows have sixover-six sashes with plain sills and short arches. It is probable that when the house was stuccoed the window arches were treated more elaborately.

The interior of Prospect Hill is arranged next to a hall which runs from east to west along the north facade. The stair and passage to the wing exist at the east end and a small library is at the west end. The two principal rooms open off the hall and occupy the southwest and southeast (original dining room) corners of the house. These two rooms have deep, elaborate plaster cornices and mantles executed in an Adam-inspired style. The low chair rails are reeded as is the mantle in the library. The quality of the interior has led to speculation that it may be the work of William Thornton. The tall proportions of the rooms and the details associate this building with the Federal style.

A two-story wing extends from the east facade of the main house. It is stone covered with stucco. The wing has lower ceilings and more modest proportions than the Federal block. The first floor windows have sixover-six sashes while those on the second are three-over-three, resembling "eyebrow" windows. A chimney protrudes from the center of the roof ridge. The wing contains a dining room with plain wood trim and a kitchen.

Prospect Hill is an early example of the Federal style in Maryland. Built between 1796 and 1798, it equals, if not rivals, later Federal buildings, e.g., the Carroll Mansion, Baltimore City, especially in the interior detailing and proportions. The builder, Thomas Ringgold, had the financial resources as well as the cultural background to construct a house in the most current tastes. He was the grandson and eldest son of two wealthy and politically prominent Chestertown merchants, both named Thomas Ringgold. His family home, the Hynson-Ringgold House, is one of the architectural monuments of Chestertown.

Tragedy surrounds the early years at Prospect Hill. Thomas Ringgold, by twentieth century standards, was an alcoholic and within a year of the construction of Prospect Hill became incapable of managing his and his family's finances. He became hopelessly in debt and spent some time in the Baltimore City jail for failure to pay his debts. His mother and brothers reacted to the situation by having him declared legally insane.¹ Ringgold's brothers, Samuel Ringgold of Fountain Rock and Tench Ringgold of Washington, D. C., managed his property. They sold Prospect Hill in 1812 to pay their brother's debts.

Before Ringgold bought the tract it had belonged to George Hunter who had farmed it since the mid-eighteenth century. Hunter received title to the land from the State of Maryland. Hunter's farm was a part of Gunpowder Manor, a proprietary manor owned by the Lords Baltimore. During the American Revolution Maryland confiscated all British property, and often, as in Hunter's case, the tenants received full title.
