

A black and white photograph of a two-story brick building with a classical facade. The building features a prominent pediment at the top with a central crest. Below the pediment, the words "INDEPENDENT TELEPHONE" are inscribed in large, bold, capital letters. The facade is divided into three vertical sections by columns. The top row consists of three windows, each with a dark awning. The middle row features a central entrance with a large, dark, arched canopy supported by two posts, flanked by two windows, each also with a dark awning. Above the central entrance and the side windows are decorative panels with curved motifs. The building is set on a sidewalk with two streetlights, and a road with a white line is visible in the foreground.
