Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance and condition of the property. Describe contributing and noncontributing resources if applicable. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, type, style, method of construction, setting, size, and significant features. Indicate whether the property has historic integrity.)

Summary Paragraph

The Thomas J. Hankins House is a one-story Craftsman-style house built on a continuous stone foundation. The house has a partial basement. The Hankins House is sided in novelty siding and is topped by a gable roof covered in corrugated metal. The house is fenestrated by one-over-one and two-over-two double-hung windows. A full-width porch spans the front façade.

Narrative Description

The Thomas J. Hankins House is located on Arkansas Highway 7 in the community of Pelsor in far northern Pope County. The Pelsor area is mountainous with national forest land located all around the area. Arkansas Highway 7 is the main road through the area. The Hankins House is a one-story Craftsman-style house built on a continuous stone foundation with a partial basement. The house is located on the west side of Arkansas Highway 7 and faces east and is one of just a few houses located in Pelsor. The Hankins House is frame in its construction, sided in novelty siding and is topped by a front-facing gable roof covered in corrugated metal. The house is fenestrated by one-over-one and two-over-two double-hung windows. A full-width porch, integrated under the main gable, spans the front façade.

Front/Northeast Façade

The front façade of the Hankins House is dominated by the full-width porch, which is integrated under the main gable. The porch is supported by five evenly-spaced square wood columns. The façade is fenestrated by two, double-hung, one-over-one windows near the northeast and southwest ends of the façade. The house's main entrance is located towards the southwest end of the façade. The front door is wood with three recessed, rectangular panels in the bottom half and a single-pane glass window in the top half. Above the front porch, in the center of the gable peak, is a diamond-shaped window providing light to the attic space.

Side/Southeast Façade

The main body of the house is fenestrated by two double-hung, one-over-one windows towards each end of the façade. The shed-roofed addition has a door with wood screen door followed by a double-hung, one-over-one window near the rear corner of the house. In the basement level of the addition is a wood-panel door followed by a wood-frame, double-hung, four-over-four window.

Rear/Southwest Façade

The rear façade of the house has two wood-frame, double-hung, four-over-four windows on the main floor level that are located near the ends of the façade. The basement level also has two wood-frame, double-hung, four-over-four windows, located directly below the main floor windows. Towards the left end of the façade, a square brick chimney is engaged to the façade.

Side/Northwest Façade

The main body of the house is fenestrated by two double-hung, one-over-one windows towards each end of the façade, mirroring the southeast façade. The rear addition is fenestrated by a wood-frame window in the basement level.

Integrity

The Thomas J. Hankins House has good integrity. The house retains its original foundation, wall, and roof materials. In addition, it also retains its original windows. Although the house had a small addition constructed in 1930, it is located on the rear of the house and does not overwhelm the design or size of the original house. The setting around the house also reflects the setting of Pelsor at the time the house was constructed in 1929. Pelsor remains a small crossroads community as it was at the time the Hankins House was constructed.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

As an example of a house in Pelsor illustrating the Craftsman style's influence, the Thomas J. Hankins House is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places with local significance under Criterion C. The exposed rafter tails and woodwork of the front porch still illustrate the Craftsman influences. When the house was built in 1929, the Craftsman style was one of the most popular styles in the United States, and the Hankins House shows the influence of the style in even the most rural communities.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

HISTORY OF THE PROPERTY

The Thomas J. Hankins House played a very important part in the life of the Pelsor community. In 1923, the Pelsor family moved to this area and applied for a post office at Sand Gap. However, it was named Pelsor on January 7, 1926. Pelsor is situated in the northwestern corner of Pope County. The town is on the top of the Ozark Mountain divide at about 2,300 feet elevation. From this point, water flows south to the Arkansas River and north to the Buffalo and White rivers.

Highway 7, which runs through Pelsor, began in New Orleans and was extended through the lands of the Louisiana Purchase, to become known as the Jefferson Highway to honor Thomas Jefferson. Planned to extend into Winnipeg, Canada, it was an important trade route for this region. The section from Russellville, Arkansas, to Harrison, Arkansas, was paved beginning in 1956. The scenery along the highway in the northern part of the state was described in The WPA Guide to 1930s Arkansas as follows:

The northern part of State 7 passes through both the Ozark and Ouachita National Forests, which together make up nearly half its mileage. The tourist sees wooded crests extending to the horizon in all directions. Dogwood, rhododendron, wild plum, and wood violets set the tone in spring, while summer brings the sun-spotted shade of deep green forests. The yellow of hickory leaves and the blazing red of sumac and gum combine with brown oak foliage and evergreens to make fall the most colorful of the seasons.

Pelsor was a good place for the Hankins family to settle, and they soon became involved in the community. Tom Hankins was appointed the new town's first postmaster, a job he held for the next 33 years. Along with his own home and general store, he built a gristmill and six rental houses. The Hankins house served as a boarding house for schoolteachers, salesmen, road workers, visitors, extended family members and friends. The house served as an information point for the isolated community, having the only telephone (wall-mounted) in the area.

When the Hankins family built their house in 1929, even though Pelsor was still an isolated community for the most part, they were able to utilize elements from the Craftsman style of architecture. As a result, even though Pelsor was isolated, the house was still able to exhibit the latest trends and styles in architecture.

Thomas (Tom) J. Hankins built the home for his family, wife Elsie Lee Dickey Hankins, whom he married in 1917, and four daughters. The house was sited on a hillside and contained four rooms: kitchen, living room and two bedrooms. The front-facing gable roof overlapped a 32 by 12-foot porch supported by five columns. The basement of the house had a dirt floor and stone walls, and was used for hanging cured meat and storing canned fruits and vegetables. The space was also used for making sauerkraut and pickles. A baby girl was born in 1930 and a new addition was built on the rear, consisting of one long room and one above it upstairs. In the early 1940s, a bathroom was installed in the addition.

The Hankins House, with its exposed rafter tails and the exposed woodwork of the front porch illustrate the influence of the Craftsman style on the house. The Craftsman style was one of the most popular architectural styles during the first decades of the twentieth-century. According to Virginia and Lee McAlester in A Field Guide to American Houses, the height of popularity for the Craftsman style was from 1905 until 1930. The style was mainly inspired by the brothers Charles Sumner Greene and Henry Mather Greene who practiced architecture together in Pasadena, California, from 1893 until 1914. It was a style that emphasized the craftsmanship and materials that went into a building's construction. The Hankins House, with its exposed rafter tails and front porch framework, exhibits the emphasis on craftsmanship and materials that is a key characteristic of the Craftsman style. The Hankins House also illustrates the popularity of the style in even the smallest rural community.

The Hankins House has remained a good example of a vernacular interpretation of the Craftsman style in Pelsor. Furthermore, it remains an important part of the Hankins family, and is currently owned by Dan Hankins, the oldest son of Thomas J. Hankins.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE PROPERTY

The construction and design of the Hankins House illustrates the fact that even in towns where things had to be done simply, houses could be built in the latest architectural fashion. The establishment of Pelsor along the Jefferson Highway (Highway 7) meant that building materials would have to arrive by truck.

The Hankins House is a good vernacular example of the Craftsman style. The house exhibits the identifying features of the style noted by McAlester and McAlester, notably a low-pitched gable roof, exposed roof rafters, and a full-width front porch. In fact, the description of the front-gabled roof subtype of the Craftsman style in Virginia and Lee McAlester's A Field Guide to American Houses describes the Hankins House well. It states:

Hankins, Thomas J., House
Name of Property

Pope County, Arkansas
County and State

About one-third of Craftsman houses are of this subtype. Porches, which may either be full- or partial-width, are almost evenly divided between those sheltered beneath the main roof [as at the Hankins House] and those with separate, extended roofs. Most examples of this subtype are one-story, but one-and-a-half- and two-story examples are not uncommon; dormers are found in only about 10 percent of this subtype.

Because of its significance as a good vernacular example of the Craftsman style in Pelsor, the Thomas J. Hankins House is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places with local significance under Criterion C.
