Description Summary:

The Jacob and Hannah Leverton House is a two-story gable-roofed brick building constructed in the first quarter of the nineteenth century, located in the midst of a large field at the end of a dirt lane running east from Seaman Road. It is approximately .6 mile north of MD Rte. 331, east of the town of Preston in southern Caroline County, Maryland. The house features Flemish bond brickwork on the facade with well-executed jack arches over the openings. The interior conformed to a side-passage plan, and retains the majority of its original Federal-period decorative detailing.

General Description:

In 1968 the house and 2.29 acres were subdivided from the farm and preservation of the building began that year. The house is referred to as the Dyott Farm in the Caroline County Survey of Historic Houses, named for the owner of the farm at the time of the historic sites surveys in 1970 and 1975. At the time of the survey, the house consisted of a three bay two-story brick section and a 1-½ story frame section with attached "L" to the frame section and approximately the same size. Only the brick section of the house remains from the time the Leverton House was surveyed and it consists of a three-bay two story side-passage plan house. Its south façade is laid in Flemish bond while the other sides are laid in common bond. All of the windows, basement to second story, have well executed jack arches one brick in height. Attic windows have sailor course arches. A two-brick corbelled cornice is located beneath a steeply pitched raised seam tin "A" roof. Most of the windows have been replaced with 1/1-pane sashes however three of the windows on the second story have muntins in their sashes which appear to be original. The west gable windows have original 4/4-pane sashes and the east gable has one replacement window with 1/1 sash. In addition to the above details, there is a basement "dog house" entrance that is larger than the outline of the original one and a porch in front of the south door.

On the east gable a two bay two story frame wing was built in 1968 to replace the original collapsing 1-½ story wing. Its fenestration is irregular, having a bay window on the first floor south façade with two windows above. The north façade has two windows of differing sizes on the first story and a double sliding window above. Most of the new windows have muntins dividing the sashes into 6-panes. The east gable has a half glazed door and a window on the first story and a picture window with flanking double-hung sashes centered on the second story.

In its original state the plan of the house consisted of an entry stair passage with single room on the west. The board partition was removed prior to 1970 to form one large living space with the stair ascending on the east side of the room. This is the plan of the house at present. The arrangement of rooms in the original frame addition is unknown; however the new addition consists of a bathroom and kitchen. The second story has a room and bath over the kitchen and a bedroom with fireplace on the west side and smaller unheated room at the head of the stair which projects about two feet into the west room. The latter two rooms are divided by board partitions. In the bedroom a closet was made on the north side of the door that protrudes into the room the same distance as the extension of the smaller room. In the attic there are two rooms divided by a board partition.

Original detailing of the brick section is modestly well finished with open-string stair ascending against the east brick wall to a landing, then at a right angle and up two steps to the upper landing and from thence four steps to the second story. The balustrade consists of delicate 2" square newel posts and  $\frac{3}{4}$ " square balusters (2 per step) with nearly round handrail extending from post to post. Step ends consist of a broad concave quarter round outline terminating in a small volute. A shadow half rail is located on the east wall with half newel as well. There is a single recessed paneled spandrel beneath the stair as well as paneled soffits beneath each run and landing of the stair. A small door is located under the first landing and a batten exterior door (1968) under the upper landing. The first floor flooring was replaced in 1968 but the exposed beaded ceiling joists are original as well as the flooring above. There are no traces of lath nail holes that are found on the majority of ceilings that were plastered at a later date. Centered on the west wall is a chimney breast with well-designed mantel around the fireplace. It consists of a three part trim supporting two plain plinths that in turn support the mantel shelf. Chair rail still remains on the chimney breast, but the remainder was removed for future installation and is now in storage. Windows, doors and trim date from 1968.

The second story rooms also have exposed beaded joists and exposed attic flooring. Original flooring is covered with plywood at present but the original mantel is still in place. It is a simpler version of the one on the first story, with two-part trim and a plain frieze with mantel shelf above. Original two-part chair rail remains around this room along with original two-part window trim around the windows on the north side, the same trim as around the fireplace. The same type of trim can be found on the second and third story door ways. Only one original door remains on the second story with one keeper and one cast iron butt hinge, but no lock to accompany the keeper. Original beaded baseboard is still in place on the upper two stories whereas that in the first story was removed and reinstalled on the furred-out wall.

The third or attic floor retains the original beaded board wall that separates the two rooms. Both rooms have carpet on the floors, beaded baseboard and plaster walls and ceiling. The small windows on the west gable are original and retain both sashes and trim. The window on the east gable is a replacement.

At the west end of the 2.29 acre property is a small non-contributing shed that was constructed after 1968, postdating the period of significance.

Summary Statement of Significance:

The Jacob and Hannah Leverton House is significant under Criterion A for its association with the Underground Railroad. The property was the home of Jacob and Hannah Leverton, Quakers. As agents of the Underground Railroad (UGRR), Jacob and Hannah Leverton and their son, Arthur, sheltered hapless runaways. In an account of UGRR activities on the Eastern Shore published in 1898, the Leverton home, located near the division line between Caroline and Dorchester counties and surrounded by the lands of other abolitionists, was described as "the main stopping place for the UGRR in the area." Jacob Leverton helped a battered young girl escape her pursuers before they appeared at his farm, demanding an explanation for her disappearance. In January 1858, after exposure of their UGRR activities, Arthur Leverton and free-black neighbor, Daniel Hubbard, had to flee their homes to evade retaliation by an angry mob.

The property derives additional significance under Criterion C as a representative example of a type of dwelling characteristic of the region in the early 19th century. Its modest woodwork and exposed beaded ceiling joists are typical of late Federal period houses in Caroline County. Its corbelled brick cornice is the earliest known example in the county.

The period of significance, c. 1820-1860, begins with the presumed construction date of the house and extends throughout the ownership of the Leverton family, whose activities in connection with the Underground Railroad in the region have been documented in several accounts.

Resource History and Historic Context:

The Leverton House is one of the representative vernacular dwellings of Caroline County in its use of modest woodwork of the late Federal period. It was similar in finish to the Liden House that stood near Smithville which had exposed beaded ceiling joists on both floors, one of the peculiar details of many dwellings in Caroline County. Its original form, consisting of a two-story section and a 1 ½ story section, is similar to the Miller's House at nearby Linchester (before the second story addition to the lower wing at turn of the twentieth century) and the Gadow House also in Linchester. The use of a corbelled cornice is perhaps the earliest in the County, the other two dating from the 1820s and located at the upper part of the County.

The Leverton House is important for its documented association with the Underground Railroad. The Levertons are mentioned in Quaker records as well as other publications concerning the Underground Railroad in this area, including nineteenth-century sources cited below. The house was included in the National Underground Railroad Network to Freedom by the National Park Service, and certified as "making a significant contribution to the understanding of the Underground Railroad in American history."

In 1814, Jacob Leverton (1777<sup>1</sup> – 1847<sup>8</sup>), a member of the North West Fork Meeting of the Quaker faith, purchased 219 acres of land,<sup>2</sup> part of the tract called “Squire’s Chance” which was patented in 1680 by John Squires.<sup>3</sup> Leverton’s land lay adjacent to the mill pond of Upper Hunting Creek Mill around which a community had grown. Choosing a spot near the mill pond, Leverton built his home, first, perhaps, the 1 ½ story frame section that no longer stands, and later, the larger 2-story brick which is the site being nominated in this application for certification. Within twenty years, he had acquired a large spread of contiguous land containing 549 acres.<sup>4</sup> It was on this expanse of wooded and cultivated acreage -- undivided by any public roads<sup>5</sup> and thereby providing some measure of security from pursuers – that Leverton offered temporary sanctuary to hounded fugitives from slavery.<sup>6</sup> In his history of the Underground Railroad, published in 1898, Siebert identified Leverton, along with his wife, Hannah, as railroad operators in Maryland.<sup>7</sup> In that same year, a Quaker newspaper reported a neighbor’s recollection of Jacob Leverton sheltering a young woman who appeared at his home bearing visible signs of physical abuse. According to the account, Leverton’s assistance in enabling the fleeing woman to complete her escape resulted in a court action against him by the slave-owner.<sup>6</sup>

Jacob Leverton died in 1847. By a devise clause in his will, his dwelling and home farm became the property of his two daughters.<sup>8</sup> Ruth Hannah (1831<sup>9</sup> - 1852<sup>10</sup>)<sup>12</sup> married Twiford S. Noble<sup>11</sup> (1827 – 1882)<sup>12</sup> in 1848 and the following year, Mary Elizabeth (1830<sup>9</sup> – ? ) married Anthony C. Thompson.<sup>11</sup> Significant about these marriages is that Twiford S. Noble acquired title to Jacob Leverton’s dwelling and farm by deed in 1857, paying $3,050 for the purchase.<sup>13</sup> Also worth noting is that Mary Elizabeth’s husband may have been the manager of the 2,167-acre plantation on the Choptank River in nearby Poplar Neck owned by his father, Dr. Anthony Thompson, whereon stood the cabin of Ben and Henrietta Ross, parents of Harriet Tubman.<sup>14</sup> This timber farm was secretly visited several times by Harriet Tubman while escorting others, including her brothers, to freedom after her own escape from slavery.<sup>15</sup>

The property also was the childhood home of Arthur W. Leverton, born in 1806, eldest son of Jacob Leverton.<sup>9</sup> In 1848, Arthur purchased the farm<sup>16</sup> that his father had devised to another son, Henry.<sup>8</sup> This is where Arthur was living when a mother with enslaved young children attempted to escape from the Cambridge area on 31 December 1857.<sup>17</sup> The fugitive family was caught a week later<sup>18</sup> but Arthur was uncovered as an agent within the UGRR.<sup>17</sup> On 14 January 1858, concealed under a pile of hay, Arthur was driven to a friend’s home, given a railroad ticket and a horse<sup>19</sup> on which he fled just ahead of a mob intent on vengeance for his alleged assistance in the failed escape.<sup>17</sup> On 23 January 1858, a Cambridge newspaper published his name, relating that Liverton had appointed a trustee and, fearing tar and feathers, had left “for parts unknown.”<sup>20</sup> Indeed, written and recorded in Caroline County, on 10 January 1858, Arthur Leverton had given power of attorney to John R. Stack to sell all of his real estate and personal property and to conduct other business affairs in his name.<sup>21</sup>

Daniel Hubbard, a free black ship carpenter “who stood some six and a half feet high,”<sup>6</sup> was an immediate neighbor of Arthur Leverton, their farms sharing a common boundary.<sup>22</sup> Hubbard did not acquire title to the 55-acre tract of land until 9 June 1849<sup>23</sup> but he had been living on the property for twenty years.<sup>24</sup> His property was partly in Dorchester County, lying south of the division road between the two counties. He, too, was implicated in the unsuccessful escape attempt in which Arthur was a suspect<sup>6,17</sup> and after placing his property in trust,<sup>25</sup> Hubbard moved to Philadelphia.<sup>6,17</sup>

An 1858 article in the Friends Intelligencer referred to “another colored man” who was “pitched upon by the mob” during the same incident as Hubbard.<sup>17</sup> Could this man have been Beacham Hubbard, a free black who lived on the road between Caroline and Dorchester Counties on a 2-acre lot sold to him by Jacob Leverton before 1845?<sup>26</sup> Or Anthony Chambers, a free negro, whose 2-acre lot bought from Jacob Leverton for $10 in 1845 lay adjacent to Beacham Hubbard’s, also facing the division road?<sup>27</sup> Or Ennals Dickinson, a free black, who, in 1849, conveyed to Foster Hubbard, a free black,<sup>28</sup> the house and four acres he, Dickinson, had purchased in 1838 from Jacob Leverton? The exact location of the Dickinson lot remains undetermined, but it was adjacent to Arthur Leverton’s farm. Another possibility for the second UGRR agent was Joshua Johns, whose 14-1/2 acres lay on the road dividing the two counties. After the Civil War Johns accumulated enough tracts to piece together a large farm, part of Parcel 20 on Property Map 59.<sup>29</sup>

William T. Kelley published a chronicle of Underground Railroad activities in the area in 1898.<sup>6</sup> Kelley and his Quaker father, Jonah, described by his son as “a strong anti-slavery man,” harbored unnumbered refugees on Jonah’s land, comprised of several hundred acres adjoining Leverton’s on the west and south. During the 1840s and 1850s, free blacks bought small farms along the north side of the road between the two counties. In effect, this area near Preston was a haven of a thousand acres stretching nearly a mile along the bi-county road, largely owned by people who were sympathetic to the riddance of institutionalized slavery.

With Jonah Kelley, a staunch Abolitionist,<sup>6</sup> we complete this initial phase of documenting owners of land in the area by accumulating enough information to assess the local political climate as it applied to the issue of slavery. Poised on the road coming up from Lower Hunting Creek Mill in Dorchester County to Upper Hunting Creek Mill in Caroline County, Kelley’s home was a harbor on the UGRR from which he would direct runaways to Daniel Hubbard.<sup>6</sup> Kelley’s land, totaling some six hundred acres, ran for a mile from east to west along the bi-county boundary.<sup>31</sup>

Viewed as a whole, the lands of Kelley, the Levertons, and free blacks created a vast refuge for people running from the laws of the time, constituting a formidable, prohibitive enclave that may have discouraged slave catchers from encroaching to pursue their quarry.<sup>32</sup> The Jacob and Hannah Leverton dwelling was the anchor for the anti-slavery activity in this area near Preston.
