Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Jordan-Busbin House is a two story frame structure with gable roof, and gable end brick chimneys that are stepped back from the eave line. A mortise-and-tenon framing system of 4"x4", and 4"x6" members rest on a 12"x14" sill, on a 34" high brick foundation. The house is approximately 48' across and 36' deep, and is 3 bays across the front with a central door. It is sheathed in poplar siding, with a composition roof. The original roofing was slate over wooden shingles. The original structure was probably L-shaped, with a one-story shed infilling the "L" to make a rectangular first floor plan that was either an early addition, or may be original to the structure.

The main entrance has a six-panel Georgian door with two side lights and fan light transom. The dining room door is in the Greek Revival Style with two light panels. The rear door has four panels. Windows are the original 6-over-9 double hung sashes, except in the second floor SE bedroom which are 2-over-2 vertical pane sash.

Interior doors are either walnut two-panels, or poplar four-panels. Walls are generally plaster, however, the SE second floor bedroom has beaver board walls, and one wall of the first floor dining room has 1"x6" tongue-and-groove pine, covered with felt and wallpaper. Parlor walls have sheet rock over plaster.

Original 1"x6" yellow poplar tongue-and-groove flooring is left exposed in the den, foyer, and all upstairs bedrooms, except the SE bedroom. Other rooms have 1"x6" oak hardwood floors. The stairway has later Victorian newel post and balusters, with a curved railing. Woodwork is generally simple flat boards and trim pieces. Mantels, in a plain Federal Style, are built up of flat boards with wood pegs.

The house was enlarged in the 1930's by the addition of an upstairs SE bedroom, bathrooms, and two one-story porches. The house was remodeled in 1978 by enlarging the second floor bath, replacing the front porch, and adding sheet rock.

The house sits on 10 acres in a rural area, with most of its original landscaping intact. Outbuildings include: a one-story brick smokehouse (ca. 1833) with gable roof; a wood frame barn with vertical siding and a tin roof, gabled with a shed addition; and two small wood frame tenant houses (ca. 1900) with vertical board and batten siding and shed roofs.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

ARCHITECTURE:

Flint River Place is a good example of the early Greek Revival period in Madison County, and one of only about a dozen surviving examples of early frame houses in the County. Although elements of the previous Federal period, including the three-bay plan and the gable-ended chimney, are present, the trim is of a larger scale. This characteristic is most noticeable in the trim around the windows. The fireplace mantels are also on a heavier, simpler design, typical of the 1840's.<sup>1</sup>

* * * * *

Flint River Place was built between 1844 and 1850 by Daniel B. Friend.<sup>2</sup>

Born in Kentucky in 1802, Friend came to Madison County, Alabama around 1826, when he married Maria Buchanan Bentley, daughter of Efford Bentley, a Revolutionary War veteran.<sup>3</sup>

Friend was a planter, who also engaged in the cotton freighting business, under the name of Friend, Johnson and Company.<sup>4</sup> Land records also indicate that he speculated in real estate.

Friend's wife, Maria, was seventh in descent from Pocahontas, and had a brother, Henry H. Bentley, who was killed at the Alamo.<sup>5</sup>

Friend sold Flint River Place in 1850 to LeRoy H. Jones, a moderately well-to-do farmer.<sup>6</sup> Jones resided there until 1858, when the property was sold to Samuel O. Nuckles.<sup>7</sup> Nuckles, born in Virginia, was among the wealthiest planters in the area before the Civil War, having assets of $90,000.<sup>8</sup>

1. Interview with Harvie P. Jones, AIA, restoration architect, April, 1981.
2. The property was valued at $4,319 in 1843, and increased in value to $9,000. The price Friend sold the property for in 1850 indicates that the house was built by Friend between 1844 and 1850.
