Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Barbourville, the location of Union College, is located in southeastern Kentucky, in Knox County, with an approximate population of 3,400. The city was formed in 1800 on thirty eight acres donated to the county for use as the county seat by James Barbour. The plan of the town as laid out consisted of a two acre public square and 78 lots of similar size. (See accompanying map - original map). The city named for its benefactor is located along the Cumberland River at the mouth of Richland Creek.

In the late 1800's the Louisville and Nashville railroad came to the mountains and Barbourville, and with the installation of the first electric plant in southeastern Kentucky, created the first boom in Barbourville's history. The second boom in Barbourville came with the discovery of oil and later natural gas. Although there was brief prosperity, the discoveries never generated the kind of development everyone had hoped. The industrial development that followed came with the opening of the Barbourville Brick and Tile Company. They began making brick around 1900 and by 1904 had nine kilns in operation. The brick company supplied brick over a wide area and is responsible for some of the especially nice brickwork on buildings in the proposed commercial district. Another major industry in the development of Barbourville came in 1914 when T.W. Minton and W.M. Jones established the Minton Hickory Lumber Company, which for a time was the largest manufacturer of golf club shafts.

The Barbourville Commercial District encompasses the core of the historic downtown area and consists of approximately six acres. The building district is located on lots from the original layout of the town, numbers 1,5,6, 7,8,9,10,11,12, and 29. All original lots except for no. 29 adjoin the public square.

The buildings within the district are one, two, and three story brick structures. Most buildings are commercial occupancy in nature, however, many buildings contain residential occupancy on the second and third levels. The district consists of 37 buildings, 5 of which have been determined to be non-contributing. However, two of the buildings are less than 50 years old, but are considered significant and three have severely altered facades. (See continuation sheet - Item 7 - Page 2). Two other buildings in the district have not been listed since they were constructed in the 1960's are non-contributing to the district. One building is the Knox County Courthouse which was constructed on the Court Square after the existing courthouse had been removed. The other structure is a small appliance store constructed on the northwest corner of the Court Square.

Most buildings in the district were built in the first quarter of the 1900's, however many buildings constructed in the last quarter of the 1800's remain in the district.

The east edge of the district on the north side of Knox Street in the 200 block includes two buildings. (See Photos R1P6/R1P10). On the east edge,

The Barbourville Hardware (2-KXB-9) is listed as non-contributing because it is less than 50 years old. The building on the northeast corner of Knox and Liberty streets has been an important building in Barbourville. One portion of the Costello Drug Building (2-KXB-10/11) housed the original movie house, The Davidson Picture Show on the second floor. The drug store portion of the building has been severely

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Barbourville Commercial Cistrict comprises a noteworthy concentration of late nineteenth and early tewntieth century, well preserved, commercial architecture. The historical significance of this commercial district are summerized by the following considerations:

- 1- The original town plan and Court Square was laid out in 1801 and the the central core around the square is still functioning and is maintained as the central commercial district not only for Barbourville, but Knox County as well. (See Historic Map).
- 2- There is a large concentration of one, two, and three story brick build- ings built of a similar time period. Even though the storefronts have been altered in most cases, the upper portions are in near original condition and have been well maintained for the most part. These structures together form a very unified district of buildings, constructed mostly in a twenty year period of time, which has created a distinct character for this downtown area.
- 3- The proposed district contains two examples of very unique and well preserved Art Deco Style movie theaters from the early 30's and 40's, one of which is still in operation in its original condition.

Barbourville was named for James Barbour, who offered to give the county two acres of land for a public square and thirty-six acres for a town if the county court would place the county seat at the mouth of the Richland Creek. Barbour's proposition carried the stipulation that the two acres would be given outright, but the moneys from the sale of the remaining thirty-six acres would be divided equally between the county and himself. This land was part of a five thousand acre tract purchased from Thomas and Jane Williams and Joseph Car.

Distribution of town lots began in the middle of 1802 with their adver- tisement for sale. Lot no. 1, which contains the Magic Theater, sold to Richardson Herndon for $16.00. Most lots around the square had sold by the end of 1803.

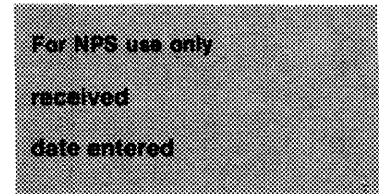

There are three major events that have shaped the development of Barbourville:

- 1- The development of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad in the late 1800's along with the installation of the first electric plant in Southeast Kentucky generated Barbourville's first boom.
- 2- The discovery of oil brought a second, but limited boom. Several years of prosperity followed, but the finds never produced what all had expected.

altered with aluminum panels and an aluminum /glass panel system. Due to this covering, the building has been classified non-contributing. However the historic photo, (HP2), illustrates a unique Romanesque Revival building utilizing a large entry arch and unusual cornice brickwork. This building still retains its original scale and shape, with removal of the metal coverings and careful restoration the building could be returned to its original state.

The north side of the 100 block of the Knox street includes three buildings. Two of the buildings, Lynn's Woodshed and The Insurance Store (3-KXB-12 and 3-KXB-13) are two small commercial two story structures. These vernacular buildings have been altered on both the upper and lower levels, but maintain their original character. The Insurance store, is a Victorian commercial building is intact on the second level and still retains the cast iron lintel between levels and applied pilasters. The first level has been altered by bricking up windows to reduce their size. The important building of the block is the former Blackstone Hotel, (3-KXB-14), located at the corner of Knox Street and Court Square. This building is an eclectic version of the Classical Revival style and has been renovated into offices on the second floor and commercial space on the first floor, with the third floor vacant. The building employs the use of brick veneer with a wood cornice between the first and second levels as well as at the parapet . The first floor windows and doors have a half round transom with wood keystone trim. The hotel was originally the Pitzer Hotel a wood frame structure constructed around 1880. In 1910 the name was changed to the Hotel Jones, the building was reconstructed, expanded to three stories and concrete block veneer was added since the city council passed an ordinance not allowing frame buildings on the Court Square. Around 1920 the exterior of the building was renovated and brick veneer was added. The name was also changed to the Blackstone Hotel. (See historical photo - HP3).

Facing the Court Square on the east side and extending down the pedestrian alley, Seiver's Court, are two small commercial infill buildings, (3-KXB-15/16), extending to an open lot.

At the north side of the Court Square, next to Seiver's Court, is the Jane Building, (4-KXB-17), listed as a non-contributing structure only because it is not 50 years old. This building is consistent in scale, style, and character with other structures and would be classified contributing when old enough. The adjoining, Tops and Bottoms, (4-KXB-18), is a two story infill vernacular commercial building. The building at the end of the block, at the corner of Court Square and N. Main St. is the three story, Queen Anne style Masonic Lodge Building. This is one of the most unique buildings in the commercial district. With the refined detailing of the stone quoined corners and trim, raised pilasters separating the facade into three bays on the front, decorative brickwork between floor levels and elongated windows, the building has a distinctive character not found in other buildings of the area. The building has been altered very little and is in excellent condition on the exterior.

(See Historic Photo - HP11 for original appearance of Masonic Lodge).

On the west side of N. Main street in the block just off Court Square, are three buildings. The building at the north boundary is the Miller-Yancey furniture store a small one story eclectic building built around 1930. (Site 5-KXB-20). The next two buildings are the oldest remaining commercial buildings in Barbourville. The building, (site 5-KXB-21) is a Vernacular Victorian wood frame building and is the only one of its kind in Barbourville. The building on the corner is the Wilson Brothers Hardware store (5-KXB-22), which is an excellent Greek Revival frame two story structure. Both buildings have been altered very little, except for the covering of the wood lap siding with "brick look" asphalt siding. (See Historic Photo - HP4). Both buildings are in very good condition, and contain detailing unique to their styles not found in any other buildings in the district.

Along the alley at the northwest corner of Court Square are two warehouse structures (6-KXB-23/24). Both buildings are utilitarian in design and were constructed around 1910 and 1915 respectively. The next lot is vacant, followed by the Knox County Supply building, (6-KXB-25), constructed in 1923, which is of Victorian Commercial design. The building is still occupied by the original business. The next two buildings are small commercial infill buildings, vernacular in style. Both buildings were constructed in the late 1920's to 1930's. The corner building of this block, at Court Square and W. Knox Street, (6-KXB-28) was originally the Post Office on the first floor and is an eclectic version of a Queen Anne design.

The building at the corner of S. Main and Court Square, (7-KXB-29), was built around 1910 and is a very nice example of Victorian Commercial design. This was the site of the original location of the telephone exchange.

On the east corner of S. Main and Court Square is the Knox County Grocery Company, (8-KXB-30), which expanded from the location next door and housed the first location of the Logan Hospital before a hospital could be constructed. This Victorian Commercial structure has been altered very little, and the brickwork at the cornice is especially nice. The adjoining structure is the Romanesque building which was the John A. Black Bank, the first bank in Barbourville and constructed in 1895. It is a quite unique building even though the first floor has been severely altered. The upper portion remains intact and the historic photo (HP8) illustrates the unusual window and trim details which afford this building its distinguished character.

The two remaining theaters are located in this block of the commercial district. The Magic Theater faces the Court Square, (8-KXB-32). The Mitchell Theater is behind the Magic off the square and is located on the corner of Liberty Street and Daniel Boone Drive, (8-KXB-37). Both theaters are of Art Deco style are owned by the Charles Mitchell family, the original owners, and operators of the theaters. The Magic was constructed in 1940 and was listed by a movie magazine as one of the ten best theaters in America.

The name Magic came from the theater having the first installation of electric entry doors. The Magic Theater is less than fifty years old, however it is considered contributing, since it is quite significant historically and architecturally. The theater is now vacant, but the facade of the building is quite unique with its large round glass block window, and is still in very good original condition. The Mitchell Theater was reconstructed in 1938 from the original Nation Theater, constructed in 1922 after a fire damaged the structure. Both the Mitchell and the National theaters were owned and built by the Barbourville Amusement Company of which Charles Mitchell, the owner's grandfather, was an original stockholder. The Mitchell was listed as one of the ten best theaters in America just after its opening. The Art Deco design of this building is simpler than the Magic. The exterior is mainly stucco over concrete masonry, however the neon signage and highlights seemed to give the Mitchell more character. (See historic photo - HP9). The neon workings partially remain, but do not work. The condition of other parts of the structure are quite good. The Carrera glass entryway, glass block ticket booth and exterior remain quite similar to the original post card of the theater.

Next to the Magic theater there are four buildings which extend down Cole's Court, another of the pedestrian alleys. These buildings (8-KXB-33/34/35/36) are all vernacular infill commercial buildings of utilitarian design, however this is the nicest of all of the pedestrian alleys due to the fact that the buildings are all similar in nature, were constructed approximately the same time, and are all in good condition. The court lends a unique and cozy atmosphere to some of the smaller commercial areas, and allows pedestrian cut throughs at the inside corners of Court Square.

The last side of Court Square, the southeast corner, includes three buildings. The building along Cole's Court is a small commercial infill structure, (9-KXB-38). The middle building of the block is the Gibson Building, (9-KXB-39), built in 1909, is a very nice example of a larger three story Victorian Commercial building. The building on the corner of Court Square and Knox Street is a large three story stone and brick building, originally The First National Bank, built around 1907. The building is listed as non-contributing because of the metal panel siding applied over the entire facade. The building occupies a strategic location in the downtown area and with the removal of the siding and sympathetic renovation could be restored to its original state. (See historic photo - HP10).

Along the first block of Knox Street, on the south side there are three buildings along with the front of the First National Bank. The first two buildings are twin structures built around 1910. One building, (9-KXB-41), has been severely altered with the cladding of the exterior with metal panels and is listed as non-contributing. The second building, (9-KXB-42), is intact at the upper portion, but both buildings have been altered with the addition of a Rexall metal panel and aluminum/glass storefront.

These Victorian Commercial style buildings are unique to the district in that they are the only buildings which have a second level 30° brick bay window featured in the center of each building. The remaining building is an important one. The Parker Building constructed around 1910 is an excellent example of a building that blends the Victorian Commercial and Queen Anne styles to create a dominating and beautiful building through the use of exaggerated height of floor levels and windows, as well as, quite detailed brickwork. The scale, construction, and detailing are similar to the Masonic Lodge of approximately the same time. It is speculated the two buildings were built and designed by the same person. The lower level of the building has been altered with the addition of a new sided storefront with smaller window openings. The historic photo (HP11) illustrates the original appearance of the building. This building is in very good condition, and retains its original character.

The boundaries of the district have been determined to encompass the contiguous area which contained the commercial buildings with the historic entity of Barbourville's downtown area.

3- The industrial development of the Mintom Lumber Company which produced wooden golf shafts and the Barbourville Brick and Tile Company spurned the development in the early 1900's with the lumber company employing large amounts of people and the brick company supplying brick for most of the structures in the district as well as a large part of the surrounding area.

The Barbourville Commercial District contains several important structures. The two Art Deco theaters, the Magic Theater and the Mitchell Theater, are excellent examples of their style and are important in the entertainment history of the area. There are two commercial structures, The Parker building and the Masonic Lodge, which are dominating three story buildings, and unusual for the area in their "Queen Anne" style. The two buildings are of similar detail and it is speculated constructed and designed by the same person. The former Blackstone Hotel is the only remaining hotel structure from that era. Even though it does not function as a hotel any longer and name and appearance have changed, the structure is still quite significant in Barbourville's history.

Although there are several buildings which have been severely altered, the buildings which comprise the district still maintain the original character and provide an unusually rich streetscape in the court square area. The merchants and local government officials have expressed an interest in working to preserve the district. The city has entered into a revitalization program to revitalize the downtown area and provide a park area and street plantings.

The Commercial district is a very good collection of buildings in this area of Kentucky and well worth preserving.

Pitzer Hotel. It was operated for many years by Mr. W.B. Anderson. In 1910 the city council passed an ordinance not allowing frame buildings on the Court Square. At this time the building was reconstructed, enlarged to three stories and concrete block veneer was added, and the name was changed to the Hotel Jones. Around 1920 the exterior of the building was renovated and brick veneer was added. The name was changed to the Blackstone Hotel, as it is still known today. Photos of the Pitzer Hotel and the Hotel Jones are included.

relationship to the community. This building is the culmination of the construction and renovations of two previous hotels on this site. The significance of this eclectic version of Classic Revival to the Barbourville Commercial District is due to its prominence on the Court Square and the fact that the exterior has not been drastically altered.

18. continued - caps, and a corbeled stepped parapet. these qualities all provide a finely detailed exterior consistent with this style. The windows have stone lintels and sills. The pilasters in the middle of the front facade extend only at the second and third levels. The brickwork is common bond, but the thin 3/16" brick joint which was used in this area on several buildings provides a smooth and refined character to the building. The first level has been altered with the addition of signage and panels covering the tall transom areas. The storefronts have been replaced with aluminum/glass openings, but the recessed entries have been retained. The entry to the HO-MED company has been replaced with a colonial doorway.

20. continued - detailed design in this unusual style, and the excellent condition the building is in make it a very significant building important not only to the commercial district, but also on its own importance as a structure. This building is similar to the Parker building and it is possible the designer and contractor were the same for both buildings. This structure seems to have a little more refinement and character.

18. continued - still intact with two over two sash. Wood/Glass storefront with recessed entrance, and wood pilasters at edge of building. A canvas awning has been added.

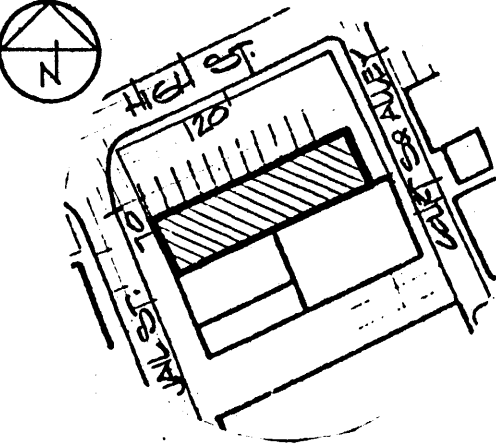

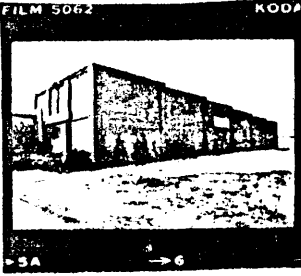

20. continued - an important part of the historic fabric of the downtown area.

18. continued - sash and wide mouldings. The building is frame, however the horizontal lapped wood siding has been removed and a siding of "brick look" asphalt shingle has been added. Secondary doors are greek revival in proportion and have half lights with three long panels. The store front is divided into three sections with the middle section containing the recessed entry. The wood/Glass store front had wood raised panels below windows which have been covered over and very tall transoms with two divisions vertically and four divisions horizontally, and thin muntins in keeping with the Greek Revival character.

20. continued - in the Barbourville Commercial District. It is a unique structure and an important aspect of this district.

However original photographs do provide information on the original building. The details of the building seem to indicate both a Romanesque and Italianate character, as well as a Victorian approach in some areas. The entry was placed in the center with double doors and a transom with a flat arched top. The windows on either side were tall double hungs with the same flat arched detail. Second floor windows are pairs of double hungs with a transom panel with a half round Romanesque arch. The top of the building contained a very ornate iron cornice with dentil work and brackets, as well as an elaborately shaped pediment cap at the top center. All of this work has been removed, and the transoms of the second floor windows have been closed up. The windows lintels and sills are broken faced limestone bands which extend as a band across the entire face of the building.
19. continued - bank relocated. The building has been a commercial establishment since that time. The building was enlarged at the rear between 1913 and 1919. There were several alterations of the building but we have no indications as to their extent.
20. continued - has been severely altered, however the second level is still quite indicative of the original character. It is a unique blend of architectural styles not found elsewhere in Barboursville, and is one of the oldest buildings still remaining in the area. It is very significant in the fabric of the commercial district.

20. continued - important details including the doors, entries, ticket boothe and light fixtures create a homogeneous character that is quite typical to the Art Deco period. This is quite an important structure from its design aspect with relation to early movie theaters as well as with relation to its historic ties to the development to the city of Barbourville. The building is still in operation as a movie theater and the interior is in original condition. (See attached post card from the reopening) The interior seats, carpet, lights and stage are intact.

18. Description This building with two sides exposed employs elements of the Victorian Commercial and the Queen Anne styles. Through the use of pilasters the building is divided into three bays across the front and five bays on the side. With the use of very tall double hung windows and transoms, the vertical (Continue on Back)		36. Date 1/84
19. History This building was the location for the Parker Mercantile Co., The New York Store, and The Union National Bank.		37. Revision Dates 38. Staff Review
20. Significance This building is one of the most unique and important buildings in the commercial district		39. Source of Information Barbourville Kentucky -A Pictorial Look Back Michael C. Mills

18. continued - height of the building is emphasized creating a three story structure with a more dominating character than other similar storied buildings. The brick is common bond with an unusually thin 3/16" flush joint. This creates a smooth texture not found in most brick work. The cornice is corbeled out between each pilaster so the face is flush with the pilasters. The parapet is corbeled out again making the cap stronger. The first floor area has been altered with the addition of a metal panel over the tall transom area, an aluminum horizontal awning, and metal panels closing off the side storefront and reducing the size of the front storefront windows substantially. The upper windows on the front have stone lintels and sills. the side windows have stone sills and triple rowlock flat arch lintels.
20. continued - Its size and location in the downtown make it an anchor building at the end of the block. Many of the important commercial, and bank facilities have occupied the structure, and the approach to its design utilizing the Victorian and Queen Anne styles further enhance its significance to the district. The building is of a similar style and character as the Masonic Building. It is suspected the same designer and contractor were involved in both buildings, although this has not been substantiated.
