DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Flatiron in shape, the Old Public Safety Building stands five stories high and has two and a half basements. The walls are comprised of steel beams and posts encased in concrete; whereas, the floors are poured concrete, reinforced with steel mesh.

The exterior is combination brick and stone, and the windows are wood casements. The curved facade at roofline is sheet metal with decorative framed zinc joints. The top shell of the building is concrete and metal flashed, with a mopped tar cover

Most of the building's 90,000 square feet of space remain unused, and the unoccupied rooms stand with rubbish strewn floors and broken windows. There is, however, an eighty car garage and an auto body shop in one section of the building.

The Old Public Safety Building is structurally sound, but in disrepair. Renovation is being considered to develop the building into condominium offices. If this is done, the exterior will be restored to its original appearance.

The Public Safety Building was designed by Architect Clayton D. Wilson, and completed in 1909 at an approximate cost of $330,000. The building was intended to house the city's jail, emergency hospital, and municipal court.

Upon completion, however, all the municipal offices moved in, and the building was overcrowded until the County-City Building was erected six years later. After that time, the Old Public Safety Building reverted to its intended use and housed the jail, the city hospital, the municipal court, and the health clinics. The court was reportedly the only one in the country that rung up fines on a cash register.

By 1918, the building was again cramped and unclean; and the hospital was often in danger of losing its "Grade A" rating. Annual admissions into the hospital and health clinics were 2,000 and 40,000 patients respectively.

Between 1920 and 1936, several mayors attempted to remodel the building and reorganize its departments. Despite the spending of over $128,000, the building remained congested and inadequate.

In 1951, the structure was abandoned when a new Public Safety Building was constructed. Owners of the Old Public Safety Building have since continuously pondered a use to prevent its being razed.

Patterned after New York City's Flatiron Building, the Old Public Safety Building was Seattle's first serious attempt at municipal construction. For many years, the structure's large mass embraced all the city's social and humanitarian functions. Eventually it housed only the jail and Police Department.

Today, the dark triangular form sits adjacent to other nearby municipal and county buildings. Furthermore, it stands as a transitional link between the city's newer buildings and the Victorian area (Pioneer Square Historic District) to the immediate southwest.
