Steele City is situated on a picturesque site in the heavily wooded valley of the Little Blue River which runs diagonally through Jefferson County.

Listed below are those steele City structures deemed most significant and worthy of National Register recognition. All the buildings nominated reflect that era in western history when the horse was the first and many times the only means of transportation.

Steele City Historic District has been so defined that all of the following buildings are included. The building locations are shown on an accompanying map as Steele City historic sites 1 through 7.

1. Livery Stable - Built in 1902, it's design is very clean and utilitarian. It is constructed of native rough quarried sandstone and mortar, with a low hip roof.

The First floor has a large brick arched doorway which provides a large enough opening to allow a carriage or wagon to pass through. There is also another archway on the southeast side of the building. These archways are provided with large sliding wood doors.

The second floor appears to have been used as living quarters for the owner. There is a doorway above the archway on the front facade which probably opened onto a deck which served as a protective porch for the main first floor entrance. The southeast portion of the second floor was originally used as a hay loft and another large archway, with a sliding door, accomodates it.

The building's windows are cleanly cut in the walls. Their framings and lintels are constructed of wood, but a few are arched with brick.

Recently a new shingle rock replaced a temporary metal roof. Although many of the window's mullions and panes have been broken, the building is in a good state of repair. The interior still reflects the original function and the basic character of the building has not been altered over the years.

2. Blacksmith Shop - Constructed in 1900 by J. W. Peters, who's name is inscribed on a superficial plaque, along with the date of construction, above the main entrance.

This building is also constructed of sandstone, rough cut and mortared. It is character is similar to the Livery Stable, but it's construction preceded that of the Livery Stable by two years. It has one and one half storgery with the attic story furnishing quarters for the owner, as in the Manyery Stable. EGISTAL difficult to maintain a pastor, the Deed and assets of the church were transferred to the Nebraska Baptist State Convention who in turn sold the building to the Lincoln Lodge, Knights of Pythias 146, of Steele City. The Knights of Pythias still occupy and maintain the building.

The church is Romanesque in character with a large round cathedral window on the front facade, reminiscent of Gothic influences. Arthur Bower, a stone cutter, is accredited with the building of this pretentious structure. The church is constructed of fine grade limestone which the members hauled from a quarry near Hanover, Kansas. Mr. Bower shaped the rough quarried limestone into oblong blocks, all of the same size. Each block had a border of smooth rock, with the natural rough surface forming the inner part of the block. This rough stone construction is typical of the Richardsonian Romanesque Style. The interior integrity has been preserved by use of hard wood floors and partitions.

The original character of the church has endured through the years and respresents a rugged well preserved building. It is one of the few remaining disbanded church buildings in Jefferson County today.

The round stained glass window on the front has in recent years been bricked up and there are minor cracks from foundation settling apart from this the church is a true representation of the original structure.

5. Zoellin House - The house may have been built by J. F. Zoellin in ca.1890. The structure is Victorian in character but has many Italianate features. The roof system is a very curious combination of forms. The front half has a very steep pitch which turns out sharply and extends past the walls forming a hip roof appearance. The rear half drops down approximately 18" and is flat. The entire eaves line is treated in an Italianate manner with ornate angle supports, regularly spaced.

The facade has two bay windows, one of which extends two stories. A porch extends around the entire front half of the house. The rear half of the house appears to be a latter addition but is reflective, in construction and building materials used, of the original structure.

6. and 7. - Two additional structures located within the defined boundaries of Steele City Historic District and with sufficient significance to be noted here, is a one story, frame house and barn (noted on the map as site No. 6) built in ca. 1880 and the Mercantile store building (noted on the map as site No. 7) built in ca. 1900. Both structures, in materials used and construction method, are typical products of home and commercial building during this period.

Steele City was platted in 1873, six years after Nebraska became a State, by Abner Baker and Robert Crinklow. The town was named in honor of D. M. Steele, President at the time, of the St. Joe & Western Railway. This railroad line ran through the town and stimulated the towns gradual growth into one of the best business centers and largest shipping stations along the St. Joe & Western lines. In 1879 Steele City was organized as a village under Nebraska Statute provisions.

During the late 1880's and early 1890's the town continued to grow and contained several stores, a flour mill, grain warehouses, and other business establishments.

In more recent years, due to declining railroad activity, the town's expansion and population has leveled off, but the town still functions as a rural center of business interests and organizations.

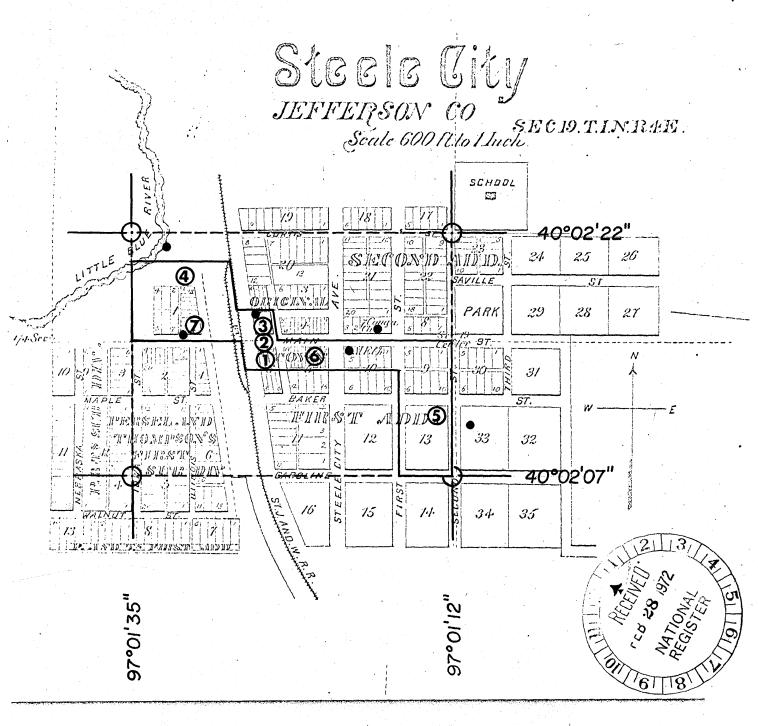

All of the structures in the Steele City Historical District represent fine examples of vernacular architecture, or an architecture without architects. They represent that period in western development when ornament for ornaments sake was consumed by the specific need for functional buildings. The designer, in most cases a technically competent layman, constructed the building without preoccupation with the intrinsic design elements that were in popular demand during this period. This kind of building is perhaps the truest form of a native American Architectural Style.

During the past year efforts have been made by the local community and interested individuals to restore the buildings within the Steele City Historic District, and if these efforts continue, Steele City could well develop into one of the best, typical restored frontier cities in the midwest.
