Describe present and historic physical appearance.

This rectory conforms to the general description under property type "Buildings Associated with Plantation Community Life" and property subtype "Church Rectories" and is similar to other houses of the same period in the area. It is a 1 1/2 story frame building with a clapboard exterior. It rests on a raised brick foundation. The standing seam metal roof is gabled. A one-story engaged porch extends across the facade. The house is basically U-shaped; there are two large front rooms served by a back-to-back hearth. Two smaller rooms are located behind these front rooms. They were originally separated by a recessed porch which contained a stairway to a loft area. The rear porch has recently been enclosed and a deck has been added to the rear of the house.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

This rectory is significant as an intact example of a mid-nineteenth century residence. The simple frame building on high piers is similar to houses used as retreats by lowcountry planters. The rectory is also historically significant for its association with the summer migrations of the Georgetown County rice planters. It was constructed c. 1850 as a rectory after the original summer chapel of Prince Frederick's Episcopal Church was built in the pineland village of Plantersville. It served as the rectory for that chapel and the present chapel, which was moved to its present location in 1877 after the original chapel was abandoned. (1)

Although the Summer Chapel Rectory, Prince Frederick's Episcopal Church is a religious property, it is eligible for the National Register on the basis of its architectural significance and its historical significance under the theme of Social History.
