Narrative Description

(Describe the historic and current physical appearance of the property. Explain contributing and noncontributing resources if necessary. Begin with a summary paragraph that briefly describes the general characteristics of the property, such as its location, setting, size, and significant features.)

Summary Paragraph

The Ritz Theater is a Streamline Moderne-style movie theater located on West Doyle Street west of Toccoa City Hall in downtown Toccoa. The building is located at the edge of the Toccoa Downtown Historic District on the corner of N. Broad and W. Doyle streets. Built in 1939, the main façade of this community landmark building is clad in stucco; the sides are brick. Brightly painted in its original colors of aqua, pink, and cream, the façade has both horizontal and vertical bands of color. The recessed main entrance has a box office window across from a double door with diamond-shaped windows. Poster display cases and single doors with diamond-shaped windows are located on each side of the recessed entrance. The exterior of the theater retains a high level of historic integrity. Plans to recreate the neon marquee are underway.

Narrative Description

The building is a large rectangular building on the corner of W. Doyle and N. Broad streets in downtown Toccoa. Designed in the Streamline Moderne style, the building has been recently restored to its 1939 appearance. The Ritz Theater opened in 1939 as a single-screen film theater. It was operated by Fred McLendon, who owned a chain of movie theaters.

The movie theater closed in 1975 and the building became a performing arts center, the Schaefer Center. Interior changes including adding drop ceilings were made during this time. Exterior changes included covering the façade with red brick.

The brick has since been removed and the historic façade restored to its Streamline Moderne-style appearance. Paint analysis revealed original colors of aqua, pink, and cream. Horizontal bands of the three colors define the façade. Additional bands of aqua and cream highlight the area over the entrance. The recessed entrance, with pink and aqua bands, houses the box office and main entrance doors. Display cases for advertising upcoming events are located on either side of the recessed entrance. Single doors with diamond-shaped windows flank the display cases. Three small windows are located on the façade in the balcony area of the building.

The sides and rear of the building are brick. The structure of the main floor is wood joists on brick foundation walls and piers.

The recessed entrance leads into a lobby area. This lobby has been greatly modified in past renovations, but remnants of the original finishes and lobby configuration were found and restored when renovation was done in 2012. A small concessions stand, men's and women's restrooms, the ticket booth, and the main floor of the theater are accessed from the lobby. The ticket booth maintains its original footprint.

The interior of the theater retains its original configuration of seating and stage format. The stage is accessed from either side of the proscenium arch, which was restored to its original configuration. The interior underwent a refurbishing with new carpet, paint, stage curtain, and seating. The carpet was replicated from remnants of the original and the original interior paint colors were duplicated based upon paint analysis. Hardwood floors were restored. The main level auditorium has 362 seats, including four handicapped seats.

The balcony, which cantilevers above the auditorium, is accessed by two stairways off the lobby, both of which also have access to the exterior. At the rear of the balcony is a cast-concrete projection room that retains its original configuration.

The building has a partial basement at the rear, underneath the stage area. The basement currently holds three dressing rooms.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria.)

The Toccoa Downtown Historic District (Boundary Increase) adds one building (118 West Doyle Street) and less than one acre to the Toccoa Downtown Historic District. The Toccoa Downtown Historic District was listed in the National Register on December 6, 2011. The Ritz Theater was not included in the 2011 historic district nomination because it was located on the edge of the district and the original stucco façade was covered by nonhistoric brick at that time and was therefore noncontributing to the district. The brick has been removed and the stucco façade restored to its 1939 appearance.

The theater opened in 1939 as a single-screen film theater. It was operated by Fred McLendon, who owned and operated a chain of movie theaters. The movie theater closed in 1975 and later was used as a performing arts center. The Ritz Theater is significant at the local level under Criterion C in the area of architecture because it is an excellent example of a 1939 Streamline Moderne-style movie theater in Toccoa and it contributes to the significance of the Toccoa downtown district as a community landmark building.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The Toccoa Downtown Historic District was listed as significant in the area of architecture for its excellent collection of intact 19th- and early to mid-20th-century commercial and community landmark buildings that represent prevailing design and construction traditions of cities and towns in Georgia. Doyle Street is the main street in the downtown business district. The Ritz Theater is located at the end of Doyle Street and is an excellent example of a Streamline Moderne-style theater with its brightly painted façade in its original colors of aqua, pink, and cream. Vertical and horizontal bands of color highlight the design elements on the façade. The recessed main entrance has a box office window across from a double door with diamond-shaped windows. Poster display cases and single doors with diamond-shaped windows are located on each side of the recessed entrance. The exterior of the theater retains a high level of historic integrity. Plans to recreate the neon marquee are underway.

Toccoa has many good intact examples of commercial architecture that date from its period of greatest growth during the late 19th century into the 1940s. The central business district is concentrated in the blocks surrounding the courthouse and railroad tracks, as is common in many Georgia towns. Commercial buildings in the district include both freestanding and attached one- and two-story buildings. Buildings tend to be attached and aligned contiguously along Doyle Street, between Broad and Hill streets. Other character-defining features of many of the late 19th- and early 20th-century commercial buildings include simple rectangular forms; fronts that face directly onto the sidewalk, usually with a common setback; large display windows; architectural ornament primarily on the front and sometimes side facades; and parapet rooflines, some with recessed or decorative panels. Most are one story in height, and brick is the most common material. A handful of two-story examples have second-story segmental-arched windows and ornamented projecting cornices. Other stylistic elements include brick corbelling and dentils, patterned brickwork, frieze paneling, and transom windows.

The Toccoa Downtown Historic District is also significant in architecture for its community landmark buildings including the Stephens County Courthouse. Other community landmark buildings include the courthouse annex (originally the First Baptist Church Sunday School building), city hall (the former U.S. Post Office), the 1964 U.S. Post Office, and the First Presbyterian Church. Public architecture, such as the WPA-funded U.S. Post Office, now city hall, tends to be influenced by classical antecedents. The church is also a good example of a classically inspired building. The Ritz Theater is the only Streamline Moderne-style building in the district.

Developmental history/additional historic context information (if appropriate)

The Ritz Theater, today known as the Schaefer Center, was constructed in 1939 as a single-screen film theater. The front façade of the building had a neon marquee announcing the featured films. Fred T. McLendon, who owned and operated a chain of movie theaters, operated the theater. The theater closed in 1975. The Toccoa-Stephens County Community Theater and the Currahee Arts Council, were created between 1975 and 1980. In February 1982, the theater was purchased from Mrs. Orville Schaefer by the Currahee Arts Council in partnership with the Toccoa-Stephens County Community Theater. Throughout the 1980s and 1990s, a great deal of work was done to the building including roofing and electrical repairs. The floor and theater seats were remodeled. The most significant change was alteration to the front façade in 1999, when a new brick façade was installed over the stucco due to a crack in the original stucco.

In 2012 funding was obtained to install an HVAC and life-safety system. A loading dock was added to the rear of the building. The City of Toccoa provided funding to renovate the main level auditorium and lobby. In 2013 a Tourism Product Development Grant funded the removal of the nonhistoric brick veneer façade and removal of the contemporary lighting fixtures and the repair of the original stucco underneath. In 2014 the City of Toccoa provided funds to repair the entry alcove, restore the original light boxes in the ceiling, install a stone cap on the top of the building, paint the façade original colors, reconstruct the two original surface mounted poster inserts, install doors, and a ticket window. The Currahee Arts Council provided funds to paint the brick sides that had previously been painted red the same paint colors as the front façade. The City of Toccoa also provided funds to install a new roof.
