Narrative Description

The James and Caroline M. Metcalf House, built c.1883 is a small, one-story stone house with an original stone lean-to on the rear. The house underwent both exterior and interior rehabilitation during 1995-97 after years of severe neglect and decline. A small rear addition and a few modern features were introduced during the rehab, but the overall historic form and character-defining features of the house were retained.

The north-facing principal facade is symmetrically composed, with a center door flanked by a pair of windows. Simple wood casings frame the openings, with the top pieces slightly pedimented and extending beyond the side casings in a lintel-like fashion. The exterior walls are locally quarried oolitic limestone, finished to various lengths but trimmed to a uniform height to allow for even courses. The surface of the stones has been tooled to a moderately smooth texture, but it is neither highly finished nor decoratively tooled. The mortar was repointed during the 1995-97 rehab using mortar of a color and texture matching the original as closely as possible. The gable roof features brick chimneys at either end and has a rear shed-roof extension creating a broken saltbox appearance. The entire roof is trimmed by a simple boxed cornice.

The interior of the original house currently has only two rooms, the 12 x 19 main room and the 8 x 10 original rear extension at the southeast corner. Beneath the rear room is a basement or cellar with stone walls. The main room was probably divided originally into two rooms, creating a hall-parlor plan, the most common of nineteenth-century Utah house types.<sup>1</sup> "Ghost" evidence of a dividing wall to the right of the doorway was discovered during the 1995-97 rehabilitation. It is possible, though not likely, the house was originally a single-cell type, and that the wall was added later, then subsequently removed. Single cells are almost always square rather than rectangular.<sup>2</sup> Therefore, though the dimensions of this house are small, it is much more likely that it was originally a hall-parlor rather than a single cell. Further support for an original two-room, hall-parlor house is the presence of two gable-end chimneys, one for each room. It may have been that the tight dimensions created by a dividing wall in this small house proved uncomfortable, prompting removal of the wall to create a more spacious and functional single room.<sup>3</sup> Since this would not have been a bearing wall, it could have been removed easily. Whether the wall was original or not, it was missing prior to the 1995-97 rehab and was not reinstalled.

Also as part of the recent rehab, a rear addition was rebuilt on the southwest corner. The earlier rear section, whether original or a later addition, was torn down a number of years ago; all that remained were a few remnants in the ground. It was almost certainly of frame rather than stone construction, <sup>3</sup>The removal of walls in nineteenth-century vernacular houses to create larger, more open rooms is not necessarily uncommon. since there is no evidence of it being integrated into the stonework of the original house. The new addition, following the dimensions of the earlier structure, is flush with the rear wall of the house but projects seven feet beyond the west side wall. Side projections of rear lean-to's are common on many Utah houses of this type and period. They often have a door on the street-facing wall of the projection, providing direct access into the rear lean-to. There is no historic photograph showing the fenestration of the older addition, so an exact reconstruction was not possible. The current addition does not have a door on the street-facing projection, but it does have a door and window on the south wall and a window on the west wall. Its shed roof matches the pitch of the original stone lean-to. The exterior walls are painted wood siding.

The Metcalf House is located at the southern edge of the town of Gunnison, across the Sanpitch River from the main section of the town. No other buildings are located on the property.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The James & Caroline M. Metcalf House, built c.1883, is one of the best remaining examples of the kinds of structures built by Mormon pioneers in Gunnison during its settlement in the mid- to late-1800s. The vernacular, Classically inspired stone houses in Gunnison describe the level of craftsmanship available and the building traditions of Sanpete Valley. They represent an important period consisting of constructing permanent, visually correct, and functional homes within a communal setting. The Metcalf House is significant as one of only ten remaining Classically detailed, nineteenth-century stone residences in Gunnison.

HISTORY OF THE JAMES & CAROLINE M. METCALF HOUSE:

The early history of the Metcalf House is a bit vague. The first recorded transaction for this property was on December 20, 1881, when Hans Larsen was granted title to parcel 7 and James Metcalf, Larsen's son-in-law, was deeded parcel 8 (the house occupies both parcels, but is mostly on parcel 7). Parcel 7 contained 21.75 acres, and parcel 8 consisted of 30.55 acres. Typical of the period, these transactions may have been just formalities, legalizing ownership claims already recognized through an informal local system. Government recording of property records in Utah did not start until the early 1870s, though most towns were settled in the 1850s and 1860s. On January 20, 1883, Hans Larsen transferred parcel 7 to his daughter, Caroline M. Metcalf (James' wife), consolidating the property under James and Caroline's ownership and indicating perhaps the first step toward construction of this house.

Though the stone house was apparently built during the Metcalf's ownership, it is unclear whether they lived there themselves. An 1879 General Land Office survey map shows a "James Metcalf" house in this vicinity, but it is located several hundred feet to the west of the corner location currently occupied by the stone house.<sup>4</sup> The house on the map and the stone house are not likely the same house. Though early surveyors estimated distances at times, and even made errors, the difference here is seemingly too great to be accounted for in that way.<sup>5</sup> The most likely "Metcalf house" referenced on the survey map is the 1-1/2 story hall-parlor or central passage house located just down the street at 224 E. 500 South. That house has lost its historic integrity through the enlargement of its front

<sup>4</sup>This map, in addition to its primary purpose as an official survey of the region, shows some 30 homes in the Gunnison area, each labeled with the name of the owner or occupant. The survey was conducted between May 19 and June 2, 1879, and the map was filed with the Surveyor General's Office in Salt Lake City on August 13, 1879. Maps are available on microfilm at the Utah Bureau of Land Management's State Office, 324 S. State, Salt Lake City, Utah.

<sup>5</sup>Interview with Mr. Dave Cook by Roger Roper, Feb. 4, 1998. Mr. Cook is currently a cartographic technician with the Utah State Office of the Bureau of Land Management and has worked extensively with the early "cadastral" survey maps and accompanying survey notes since joining the BLM in 1957.

windows and the installation of aluminum siding on the exterior. It is located on parcel 8, which Metcalf formally received title to in 1881 but apparently "owned" prior to that time. The 1880 manuscript census corroborates the information on the map: the households listed nearby the Metcalf house in the census match those shown in the neighborhood on the 1879 map. The Metcalfs, who married in 1868, were not listed in the 1870 census, so they apparently made their home in Gunnison some time during the 1870s.

Since the stone house does not show up on the 1879 map, it was apparently constructed later, most likely after Caroline Metcalf's parents, Hans and Johanna Larsen, transferred title of parcel 7 to her in 1883. Part of that 1883 transaction included other lots in town, which may be where the Larsens lived during their years in Gunnison. It is possible, though not very likely, that the Larsens built and lived in the stone house and that it was inexplicably omitted from the 1879 survey. Census records seem to confirm the Larsens living elsewhere though; none of their neighbors in either the 1870 or 1880 census match the households shown on the 1879 map.<sup>6</sup>

Still, the question remains as to who lived in the stone house. It seems unlikely that the Metcalfs would move from their larger house to this modest one, especially given the size of their family (5 children) and James' seemingly successful career raising livestock. Had James taken another wife, as many staunch Mormon men did during that period, then this separate stone house would have accommodated one of his families, but there is no indication that he was a polygamist. In fact, given his career shift in the 1890s to operating an alcoholic beverage bottling company, he even may have been an inactive Mormon (the church forbids consumption of alcohol).

Other possible occupants of the stone house may have been relatives or workers assisting with the family livestock business. The 57-plus acres the Metcalfs owned on parcels 7 and 8 may have been the center of their livestock operation. A large livestock shelter, constructed of the same stone as the house, is located nearby to the west, though, it is not on the property included in this nomination.<sup>7</sup> Regardless of who lived in the house, it seems clear that it was constructed during the years the Metcalfs owned it, 1883-1911.

James and Caroline Metcalf and their children apparently made their home in Gunnison from the 1870s through about 1893. Caroline Marie Larsen (1850-1917) was born in Denmark and came to Salt Lake City with her parents in 1862. She married James Metcalf in 1868, and together they had at least five children. A brief biographical sketch of James Metcalf (1847-1922) appeared in the local newspaper upon his death in 1922.

<sup>6</sup>The Hans and "Hannah" Larsen listed in the 1880 census may not be the same Hans and Johanna

<sup>7</sup>According to the current owner of that structure, the remaining 100-foot section is only half its original length; the other section was torn down following damage from an earthquake a few years ago. Also, parcels do not necessarily indicate ownership boundaries.

James Metcalf was a native of England and when a young lad came to America with his parents. He settled here [Gunnison] in later years and was a resident of Gunnison and the Gunnison Valley for many years. He was active in stock raising and prominent in political circles and was among the foremost in upbuilding the city and valley.<sup>8</sup>

James was also reportedly one of the pioneers in the sheep business in the south part of Sanpete County.<sup>9</sup> The 1880 census lists him as a "farmer and stockraiser." By 1894 the family had moved to Salt Lake City, where James continued in the livestock business for a short time before opening Metcalf & Sons Bottling Co., with sons James Jr. and Fred L., in the late 1890s. The family continued in this business for a number of years.<sup>10</sup> Caroline passed away in 1917, and James died in 1922 in California, where he had moved for health reasons three years previously.

Despite moving to Salt Lake City, the Metcalfs retained ownership of the little stone house in Gunnison until 1911, when they sold it to Anthony Madsen. Perhaps some of the family continued to reside in Gunnison for a time. For example, the 1898 Salt Lake City Polk directory shows James and several other family members residing at the southwest corner of 400 East and Sherman Avenue, while James Jr. was listed as a resident of Gunnison. The stone house and surrounding property may have helped finance the start of the family bottling business in Salt Lake City. James secured a $100 mortgage on the property from Manti City Savings Bank on October 24, 1896, which is just the time the business appears to have been getting started.

Subsequent owners of the house include Anthony Madsen (1911-31), B.A. Madsen (1931-36), the Federal Land Bank of Berkeley (1936-55), Peter Peterson Jr. (1955-58), LaVor and Neva Peterson (1958-66), Keller Christensen and KC Farms (1966-94), and Roger G. and Pamela A. Baker, 1994-present.

GUNNISON HISTORY:

The establishment of Gunnison in 1862 resulted from the resettlement and merging of two earlier communities, each built up in 1859 along the lower Sanpitch River in upper Gunnison Valley. During a visit in 1862, Mormon leader Brigham Young saw the limitations of the swampy area and advised the people to move up to the bench area, where a new town was built. The town was named in honor of government explorer Captain John Gunnison, who was killed with six of his men by Indians while in Central Utah in 1853.

Joseph S. Horne was sent from Salt Lake City to serve as bishop in 1868. He directed the creation of a cooperative store, the opening of a rock-salt mine, and in 1876 he was acknowledged for his role in managing the building of schools, meetinghouses, mercantile stores, private houses, grist and sawmills, and salt boilers, as well as overseeing the improvement of roads, enlargement of farming lands, and the extension of tree planting and other home industries.

Gunnison's fortunes prospered and the city's population more than doubled in the decade ending in 1900. As it grew, Gunnison developed as a commercial center of the valley, featuring flour and feed mills, a co-op store, general and specialty stores, and the Gunnison Valley Bank. Religious, civic, and educational facilities were built as the city expanded, including a dance hall in 1896, and a new city hall and rock school in 1899. The telegraph had arrived in 1882 and Gunnison officially became a town in 1893.<sup>11</sup>

The construction of the city's earliest buildings was aided by a vertical "pit-saw" sawmill built in 1863, followed soon after by a horse-powered circular sawmill. Many of the early structures were erected by stone mason Christ Tollestrup, adobe craftsmen Eric Larsen and Harmon Christensen, and carpenter William Christensen.

ARCHITECTURE:

Mormon planning in the Sanpete Valley reflects their religious beliefs. Communitarian values such as cooperation and unity were advanced through the implementation of a nucleated settlement pattern. Within this pattern, the single family dwelling was the prevailing residential unit.<sup>12</sup> No specific designs were recommended, however, the quality of housing was described by Brigham Young in 1860:

Good houses are comfortable and very convenient, and pleasure our feelings, and are tolerably healthful when properly ventilated. If we cannot raise grain, raise houses, and build the best houses we can think of. If you are going to do a good deed, do as good a one as you can think of. If you wish to build a house, build as good a one as you can imagine.<sup>13</sup>

The message was to build solid, pleasing houses by utilizing the building traditions that came with the immigrants into the Sanpete Valley.<sup>14</sup>

Primarily Classical style buildings were constructed during the settlement period in this area. They incorporated geometrical composition and symmetrical balance with their rectangular facades, centrally placed doors, and smooth, regularly punctuated elevations.<sup>15</sup> Classical characteristics, such as proportion and balance to create a harmonious whole, included the way in which the building would be used. Also, function was an important component in the folk building tradition. The plan of the house was to be built within an appropriate form.<sup>16</sup> The use of indigenous materials, such as oolitic limestone in Gunnison, also helped to shape the architectural landscape. The Metcalf incorporates these features and is an excellent example of the original permanent and substantial homes being built in Gunnison during the 1870s-80s. It remains as one of only ten known stone houses constructed prior to 1900. From the remaining buildings in Gunnison, there are roughly equal numbers of stone, adobe, and brick buildings with a period of construction that dates prior to 1900.<sup>17</sup>

The Metcalf House is architecturally significant in Gunnison. It is a vernacular, rather than high-style, building, reflecting house forms common in Utah and throughout the United States during the nineteenth century. The original c.1883 hall-parlor was a substantial house form that remained popular in Utah until well into the 1890s.<sup>18</sup> The hall-parlor and other earlier house types (single cell, double-cell, central passage, etc.) were usually detailed with Classical elements, such as Greek Revival returns on the gable ends. The Metcalf House is a clear representative of this architectural trend.
