There has been an organized Catholic congregation in Macon since the early 1840's. It was housed successively in two converted Presbyterian churches. By the later portion of the last century Catholics were numerous enough to undertake the building of their own structure.

In 1887 the Harris residence and the adjoining Hunt property were purchased to serve as the site of the new church. Plans were drawn for a modified Romanesque-neo-Gothic church by a Mr. Woodruff with the help of a Jesuit laybrother, Brother Otten, S.J. Work was begun sometime in 1889 and not completed until 1904.

The church is the mother church of Catholicism in middle Georgia and in a sense one of the earliest large churches south of Baltimore. From the congregation in Macon came congregations in Albany, Atlanta and all of the smaller towns from the Florida border to the hills north of Atlanta.

In this church was born the famous Catholic layman's association Georgia the most effective organization for combating anti-Catholic prejudice in the 1920's. It served as a model for similar groups throughout the country.

The church was built under the direction of the Jesuit fathers who staffed Pio Nono College in Macon until the building burned in the twenties. These priests also built two other similar churches, one in Augusta, Georgia and one in Tampa, Florida. St. Joseph's is the smallest of the three and perhaps the most beautiful.

The church now serves as a parish church for about half of Macon's Catholics and as the principal focus point of Catholics in Middle Georgia.
