As only one section of the town of Hansfield, the Mansfield Center Historic District realizes a still existent pre-industrial rural village.

There are many areas of the town: Gurleyville, Tagleville, Mansfield City, Mansfield Depot, Mansfield Hollow, Hount Hope, Spring Hill, and Mansfield Center are the most familiar. The largest and best known is Storrs, where the state university sprawls over 28%0 acres and has an enrollment of more than 20,000 students.

The first settlement in Mansfield, in about 1692, was at Mansfield Center, in a quiet valley south of the university. A highway eight rods wide was laid out and the land on either side was divided into twenty-one house lots. With each house lot came the right to 1000 acres in outlying parts of town. Gradually the woods were cut for building and on the clear land crops were grown and cabtle pastured. As the outlying land was used, highways were built, resulting in a road pattern resembling spokes from a hub.

The district today remains essentially the same village it was in the 18th and 19th centuries. There is a general store, a library, the town hall the Congregational Church, and an elementary school in the vicinity. The well-kept houses of Colonial, Federal, and freek Revival styles are obviously cared for by conscientious owners. Of large proportions with some detail and ornamentation, the homes give evidence of the wealth derived from local agriculture and concercial activity in neighboring towns.

As industry became the major force in the development of towns in the mid-19th century, mills and manufacturing sprang up on the rivers surrounding Hansfield Center, in Millimantic and Stafford Springs. Some of the Center's finest homes were built in this time by Colonel Edwin Fitch for the men who had been successful at business. Since late in that century there has been at least one store, but other commercial establishments have not threatened the character of the Center until recent years when the population of the town of Mansfield has exceeded 12,000.

The architectural characteristics of the area provide a sense of identity for the contemporary district with village life of the 18th and 19th centuries. There is a great sense of unity among the residents. Many are professors at the university; all are people who take great pride in their homes and their community. There is much interest in the preservation of the Center as an unspoiled rural village.

2. Location

The Mansfield Center Historic District includes the properties on each side of Route 195 from the intersection with Chaffeeville Road on the northwest to the intersection with Center Road on the south. The east boundary follows the rear property line of the properties fronting on Route 195, just north of Warrenville Road, Center Street, and the southwest shore of Echo Lake. The west boundary follows the rear property lines of the properties fronting on Route 195.

The way in which Mansfield has developed during the post two and a half centuries accounts for the historical and aesthetic quality still evident in the village of Mansfield Center. The Mistoric District extends over the area of original settlement and includes twenty-six homes as well as the library, general store, town hall, and Congregational Church.

One of the most impressive parts of the District is north of the church. Here is located the oldest house in town (c. 1710), a very large Greek Revival residence, five 18th century houses, several early 19th century and Greek Revival structures, and the library.

The Williams House (1710). Probably the oldest in Mansfield, this house was the home of Reverend Elegzer Tilliams, who served as the first minister of the church there for thirty-two years (1710-1742). 4e was the son of the Reverend John Milliams of Beerfield, Mass. Bleamer, studying at Harvard, was the only member of his family who was not at home on the night of the French and Indian massacre, February 20, 1704. His father and five children were taken to Canada as prisoners. Two other children and a serwint were killed on the doorstep of the family's home and Mrs. Filliams was killed in Freenfield, Lass., two days later. The youngest child, Tunice, married an Indian after years of captivity.

After Reverend Bleazer Lillians' death, his daughter Mary married the Reverend Richard Solter, who came as the second pastor in 1743 and served the church until his death in 1787. Between 1750 and 1775 the house was changed to a two-chimney, center-hall house, typical of the Boston area. The superb paneling of this period has survived in the north parlor and north chamber.

The late III er D. Weith considered this to be one of the most architecturally interesting houses in Connecticut. His comments are: "Few houses show the alterations of a family of means generation after generation more clearly than does this which served as the personage for about 75 years in the days when the clergy were not only the most learned, but the most affluent members of the community."

Construction of the house was started by Samuel Fuller, the Town Surveyor, on Home Lot Mo. 7, which was purchased in December, 1709. In June, 1710, the Town purchased the partly finished house and lot for 132 and authorized an additional 160 for its completion as a home for the first minister. The original construction of this period may be observed in the south chamber there the chamfered summer beam is exposed. The original clapboards with heavy bead nailed directly to the studs are still on the front.

The house was placed on the National Register of Historic Places, March, 1971.

The Fitch Mansion (1836). This is the largest and most impressive house in the Historic District. It was built in 1936 by Mansfield's most famous master builder, Colonel Edwin Fitch. Situated on the west side of Storrs Road, immediately north of the library, the house is corrounded by a tract of some simily acres.

This house was a otrong-willed man's response to his prospective father-in-law's demand that he provide a house before he could marry his daughter. In 1835, Fitch, only twenty-three years old, bought le acres on which to build the most elaborate house in the Center. Lassive Topic columns support a medimented portico across the front of the house while the door is framed with intricate moulding. In so small a village people naturally talked about a poor young men building such a pretentious house; it was dubbed ""itch's "oll:". Some years later Fitch built and moved to a more modest though still imposing house on Centre Street.

Since the main structure was built it has been enlarged, attractive outbuildings have been added, and the estate has been well-land camed. "Fitch's Folly" has become the Center's Pride. It is presently owned by Trs. Tenneth Kinney.

The Pirst Church of Christ (Congregational) was established in 1710. It was the first church in Mansfield and perhaps in Tolland County. In 1753 a second, larger church was built. The present building was built in 1866 after a fire had destroyed the previous structure. Tt is said to have been built by Ralph Charmell, one of Titcl's sorentices.

ansfield Center Library (1993). The Library stands on the site of the old school house, just across Brown's Road from the Church. It is a one-story brick and stone building in the style of the Georgian Revived which sits on a rise above and faces out on Storra Road (Rt. 175).

The Town Pound (1801). On April 13, 1801 the town neeting voted to have two stone pounds, one in each Society. Both were built, and this one, for the South Society, survives on the estate of Ers. Renneth Tinney. It is of rectangular stone construction.

Originally the village was laid out in twenty-one lots along Town Otreet, (present Route 195), for about a mile. Forth and south ends of the street were marked by unpretentious blockhouses.

The Old Uncle Hall Place. Muilt perhaps as early as 1504, this house was placed on a slight rise at the north end of the village and was apparently fortified by its first owner, Joseph Hall. The historic, colonial qualities are more apparent inside than out for it was faced with native stone in this century. A small attractive cottage, also of stone, stands is rediately in front of the main house. A wood frame barn is the only other structure. All of the buildings are well back from Storrs Road (Route 195) and hidden from view by abundant trees and shrubbery.

The Dodd House. Another of the oldest houses in the Center is that owned by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred W. Dodd. It is named for a Civil Mar Veteran, Enoch Dodd, Alfred's father. Its precise age is a matter of some speculation because of the evidence of seventeenth century foundations. It may well be that the building was once Joseph Hall's fortified north outpost of the village. The cottage and its large red barn are set on tidy grounds on quiet Dodd Road.

On Centre Street, which curves to the east from Storrs Road, are some very attractive  $13^{\rm th}$  and  $10^{\rm th}$  century houses.

is one of the central buildings in Tansfield Center—the country store. Built by Charles U. Tecks in 1886, it has retained its 19th century qualities which include its interesting facade and the continued practice of posting notices and advertisements on a bulletin board on the front porch. One of the few remaining country stores in Connecticut, it is now known as "Barrows and Burnham"

NECENTED The Mitch House. This Greek Revival house was built in 1818 by 197 Fologel Edwin Fitch. An older, small structure was the base upon which Fitch built the handsome front section. It was Fitch's home which and tenter of operations for his trade after he lost his first home, REGISTER THE Witch Hansion, to the village money lender, Zalmon Storrs.

Large and consodious without being pretentious, the house is set in spacious and well-manicured grounds.

The Aspinwall House. At the point where Centre Street turns abruptly north there is situated one of Mansfield's oldest houses. It was built in 1740 by Prince Aspinwall. Described in 1880 as "a quaint one-story, very high gabled-roof structure", it has been remodeled often yet retains its grey-shingled colonial appearance with much of the original material left intact.

The Payne Cottage. The first two rooms of this house were built in 1794 as a saddler's shop for the Aspinwall house. Since then the house has undergone a steady growth down to 1266 so that it now has ten rooms and extends will back from the bend in Centre Street toward the Town Pond (Tcho Lake). Sometime in the 1860's it is said that the front rooms were raised to second-story level and new rooms built underneath. The old front door was then sealed up. This accounts for the peculiar arrangement of the second-story windows. The present owners, Tr. and Trs. Hugh Hamill, encountered a full cistern 8 feet deep under the floor when they remodeled the back part—a relic of the days when a cooper owned the house. There are no outbuildings which stand near the property although a barn was once associated with it.
