DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Around 1736 Welsh Baptists came to South Carolina and settled in the Pee Dee region. Some sources date Welsh settlement in the Cheraw area as about 1752. In 1766 Eli Kershaw, who had been given a grant of land along the Pee Dee River, laid out the town of Cheraw. It was incorporated in 1820. Located at a key navigational point, Cheraw began to develop as a commercial center of interior South Carolina; however, the War Between the States and the years of Reconstruction temporarily halted this progress. For a time development was impeded and rebuilding was delayed. Although the town eventually prospered, much of the physical character of the town remained unaltered. Today tree-lined streets, antebellum houses, and town greens characterize this small southern town. With a population of approximately 6,000, Cheraw looks in many ways as it did over one hundred years ago. The following properties are included in the historic district:

1. St. David's Episcopal Church and Cemetery (National Register) -- Church Street, original 1770-1773 frame building. Vestibule and square steeple added to western end in early 1800s. Example of 18th-Century meeting-house construction with early 19th-Century addition of frame tower with diminishing tiers.
2. Ellerbe-McIver House -- Church Street, (built ca. 1835), typical up-country farmhouse, two-story frame structure with truncated hip porch roof, supported by four free-standing Doric columns
3. Godfrey House -- 417 Church Street, (ca. 1850), two-story frame structure; porch with pediment a later addition.
4. Covington House -- 508 Church Street, (built ca. 1827-1832), one-story hall and parlor house with gable roof and front veranda, grill work between columns a later addition. Structure in extremely poor state of repair.
5. Mill Houses -- corner of Church and High Street, three one-story frame structures; all have central halls with rooms to either sides. Front verandas with narrow columns and balustrades.
6. Matheson - Hook-Moore House -- 620 Kershaw, (built ca. 1900s) two-story structure in Classic revival style. Large one-story veranda with second floor central balcony. Exaggerated cornice with swag trim.
7. Matheson Memorial Library -- 612 Kershaw Street (ca. 1810), upcountry farmhouse. Two-story frame structure with shed roof covering front porch. Built by Cheraw Academic Society and the Masons as private school and Masonic Hall. Later uses include church and residence, now used as library. Union troops believed to have used grounds during War Between the States.
8. Funderburk House -- 506 Kershaw, originally one-story cottage style frame structure. Second story was later addition. Porch has shed roof.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Cheraw, which bears the name of an Indian tribe once inhabiting the area, is located on the Pee Dee River in South Carolina. Established in 1766 the town gradually developed into a commercial center. As an area directly affected by the Revolution and the War Between the States, Cheraw is today both a tangible and a visual reminder of the economic and cultural changes occurring in the South in the 18th and 19th Centuries.

Architecture: Cheraw is an area representative of various styles of 19th-Century American architecture. Located within the district are the early frame homes of the 1800s (often called upcountry farmhouses), antebellum structures with Greek revival porticoes, and Victorian houses of the turn of the century. There is a definite sense of architectural unity throughout the town as well as a continuity of design which identifies this as an historic district.

Commerce, Transportation: The Great Pee Dee River has played an important role in the development of Cheraw. Located at the head of navigation on the river, Cheraw began to achieve commercial importance. Before the War Between the States Cheraw was the center of a large cotton market. The Merchant's Bank of Cheraw, an important South Carolina banking establishment, was also located there.

Landscape Architecture and Urban Planning: Cheraw is a planned town, having been originally laid out by Eli Kershaw. The town greens he designed still remain as do Cheraw's original boundary markers. Streets were carefully planned. High Street was the highest point in town, next came Fourth Street (today Greene), Third, Second, and Front Street which was closest to the Pee Dee River. Streets perpendicular to these were Church, Market, and Kershaw Streets. The streets were wide and by 1830 were lined with elms. Trees were also planted in the medians. Some of these center islands still remain, particularly on Third Street.

Military: During various stages of the Revolution, British troops occupied parts of South Carolina. In 1780 there was a small British outpost on the Pee Dee River at Cheraw. St. David's Episcopal Church was used as a temporary hospital by the British soldiers.

During the War Between the States, General William T. Sherman's army entered the town of Cheraw on March 3, 1865 and remained there for three

9. Wannamaker House -- 500 Kershaw, (ca. 1800), two story house in style derived from Queen Anne design with clapboard, fish scale, and pseudo half timbered sidings. Central tower is focal point.
10. Blue House -- 416 Greene Street, (ca. 1850), originally built as summer home. Colonial cottage design. 12 foot high ceilings are of wide painted boards; center hall extends length of house opening into front and back porches.
11. Enfield (John Nock House) -- McIver Street (ca. 1820), two-story frame structure with gable end chimneys; shed roof porch on front and back; upcountry farmhouse.
12. Hartzell House -- 143 McIver Street, (ca. 1790), two-story white frame structure with wide six-columned shed roof porch; back porch enclosed. Gable end chimneys are of brick. Believed to have been Sherman's headquarters in 1865.
13. Edwin Malloy House -- Third Street, (built ca. 1825), originally up-country farmhouse, greatly altered and moved back from street at turn of century. Restored in 1940s; all porches removed except center one with four giant order Doric columns. Original brick walls and slave cabins to rear of structure remain.
14. Lafayette House (McKay House) -- Third and Kershaw Streets, (ca. 1820, remodeled 1835 in Federal style), two-story frame structure with raised basement; flat balustraded roof; entrance portico with octagonal posts has modillioned cornice and a flat roof that forms a balustraded second story porch. Entrance doorway with fanlight is repeated on second floor. Lafayette is believed to have visited here in 1825 on his return to United States.
15. Old Malloy House (Teacherage) -- corner of Third and Kershaw Streets, (ca. 1790), structure one of oldest in town. Front wing added in 1850s.
16. Market or Civic League Hall -- Corner of Market and Second Streets, (ca. 1836), two-stories. First floor originally open, now stuccoed and enclosed. Second floor is white clapboard. Second floor piazza and pediment supported by four Doric columns on each story. Once used as court of equity.
17. Town Hall -- Market at Second Street, (ca. 1858), two-story frame structure with four giant order Doric columns supporting the portico; pedimented boxed cornice. Exterior double staircase extends from the second floor; iron steps and grill work designed by Christopher Werner of Charleston. Once served as Cheraw Masonic Lodge.

8. Significance (continued)

days. St. David's was again used as a temporary hospital for the wounded. Much of the business establishments in Cheraw were burned at this time; however, few residences were destroyed.

Cheraw was one of the towns visited by Lafayette on his tour of the United States in 1825.

Political: John Auchincloss Inglis, once principal of the Cheraw Academy, served in the South Carolina House of Representatives (1856-1859) as a delegate from Chesterfield County. In 1859 he was elected Chancellor of the State of South Carolina. In 1860 he was a member of the Secession Convention and introduced the resolution "that the State of South Carolina should forthwith secede from the Federal Union, known as the United States of America." He also chaired the committee to draft the Ordinance of Secession.

Henry McIver, who attended school in Cheraw, also attended the Secession Convention and signed the Ordinance as delegate from Chesterfield.

Religion: St. David's Parish was established by act of the South Carolina General Assembly in 1768. St. David's Episcopal Church was constructed 1770-1773 and is today one of South Carolina's few remaining pre-revolutionary church buildings.

Archeology: Before white settlement, the area around what is now the Pee Dee River was inhabited by various Indian tribes. Among these was a group called the Saras, later the Charraws and then Cheraws. A village of this tribe was located in the vicinity of the present town of Cheraw, South Carolina.

Areas around Cheraw have produced archeological information concerning various Indian groups. The land surrounding Cheraw and even within the town limits still has potential for archeological research.
