The original mill (c. 1840-1870) is a site only. The only documented description states that it was small and crude.

The later mill (c. 1870-present) was constructed on the site of the original. The mill, race, spring, and mill pond remain virtually unchanged by modernization.

The mill building is a large three-storey frame and clapboard structure resting on a foundation of unmortered, stacked native stone. The framing consists of huge hand-hewn oak timbers, the center beams measuring $10" \times 12" \times 40"$ and the cross beams $6" \times 8" \times 30"$. The rafters are cedar poles of 4-5" diameter. The original shake roof has been replaced with tin.

The mill has deteriorated due to disuse and a faulty roof. Much of the clapboard siding is in a state of rapid decomposition and some boards are missing. Floor planks are weak and unsafe. However, the oak beams and cedar rafters are in an excellent state of preservation and the structure remains fairly level.

The building contained a grist mill, flour mill, cotton gin, saw mill, and later a hammer mill. The grist mill on the ground floor, the flour mill with its belts, bins, pulleys and chutes on the second and third floors, and fragments of the cotton gin remain.

The mill was powered by a turbine of which the gears and shafts remain extended from the side of the building at the end of the race. A large permanent spring feeds the mill pond from which a rocked in race supplies water to the mill. The spring, pond, and race remain unchanged except for a section of the race which was modernized by the addition of concrete sides before the mill ceased operation.

The Boxley (Whiteley) Mill is an excellent example of a once common local industry which was vital to the settlement and economic development of many early rural Arkansas communities. Not only are the building, pond, and race present but more important the various equipment necessary for the operation of a flour and grist mill remains largely intact.

The original mill, built by Abner Casey (c. 1840), supplied services to the settlers of the upper Buffalo River valley. At an unknown later date Samuel Whiteley purchased the business which then became known as "The Whiteley Mill".

This small mill was razed (1870) due to its inadequacy in fulfilling the increased demands of a growing populace. The community then employed a man named Miller to construct a larger more efficient mill at the same location.

Robert Villines became the new miller. His son, James Larkin Villines, and grandson, Clyde Villines, each in their turn became the owners and millers.

A general lack of business forced Clyde Villines to cease the mill's operation in the 1960's ending, a long history of community service.

The mill was also the site of a two hour skirmish, described by the following Civil War dispatch:

"The battle of Whiteley's Mill (Boxley) was fought The Union officers were: Captain Orr April 5, 1864. of Co. C and Lieutenant Bell of Co. L. The guerilla leaders were Cecil, Cooper and Patton. Pvt. John H. Murray of Co. F was killed and Obed W. Patty of Co. I missing. Pvt. Gustavus Bishop of Co. C was wounded. The man missing had his horse shot dead under him, and is probably a prisoner, if not killed. of the enemy has not been ascertained."

Dr. Murtagh:

I called Gene Richardson of the Arkansas staff June 20, 1974. He said the mill was included in the Buffalo National River, Arkansas. The Park Service has attempted to purchase the mill to restore it, but have so far been unsuccessful. The present owners do not want to sell the property and do not feel the mill is in need of repair. Richardson feels that the property will probably be condemned and obtained by the Park Service. He feels that listing on the National Register would help convince the present owners that the property is valuable and should be preserved and protected.

Richard W. Sellers, in a Special History Report... on the Buffalo National River, done at the Denver Service Center, October 1973, feels that the mill is one of only three structures in the National River which have regional significance. (p. 4). Enclosed is a copy of his brief report on the mill.

N.B. If accepted and the name is changed, I think Villines Mill is more appropriate. Whiteley had very little, if any connection with this mill.

Villines Mill

Location: NE 1/4 of Section 3, T 15 N, R 23 W, Newton County, Arkansas.

Accessibility: Just off of State Highway 43 near Boxley.

This two story frame buildings was constructed in 1870 by Robert Villines, grandfather of Clyde Villines, the mills' present owner and its last operator. For eighty years, the mill served the local area as an economic and social center. Finally, in 1950, Clyde Villines closed the mill. A tin roof, his kept the mill from deteriorating badly, and the building appears to be structurally sound.

The Park Service should attempt to purchase the mill, restore it, and return it to good working order. The mill could become a major attraction in the Boxley area, and would be an important part of the interpretive program. Mr. Ed Baxter, of the Arkansas Historic Preservation Office, in Little Rock, is preparing to nominate this structure to the National Register.
