The Bassel House is a five bay Double-pile house with a hipped roof. A single-story, Queen Anne style front porch was added in the 1890s.¹ The walls are brick, the roof is slate, and the foundation is sandstone. The Bassel House is located in the small town of Lost Creek in Harrison County, West Virginia. The house is situated on 1.79 acres between State Route 25 and Interstate 79. Originally, the Bassel House was surrounded by 217.5 acres of land; however, through the years, that amount decreased to 10 acres. The property further decreased in size in 1966 when 7.23 acres were sold to the West Virginia Department of Highways for the construction of Interstate 79. An additional 0.98 acres were sold in 1969, leaving the house situated on 1.79 acres of land. To find the Bassel House, traveling south on State Route 25, it is the first house on the right past the intersection of State Route 270 and State Route 25. The house faces east with the east façade facing State Route 25. The lot contains a front and two side yards; there is a small stream at the back of the house. Leading from the road to the front porch is a fieldstone walk. The outline of previously abundant flowerbeds lines the front porch. In addition, there are two old pine trees in the side yard to the north of the house. Located on the south side of the house is a small two-stall brick garage. The noncontributing garage was built in 1966 from the bricks of the cellar. The cellar was removed for the construction of Interstate 79. The house has remained in the Bassel family for about 140 years.

The construction of the Bassel House began in 1860 and was completed in 1865. The house is symmetrical with a center door on each floor and four 6/6 double-hung windows on each side of the central doors. The foundation of the house consists of sandstone slabs. The walls are made of baked red brick, in a common bond pattern. The brick was made on location; however, no evidence of the kiln remains.² There is elaborate Queen Anne spindle work on the full-length one-story front porch. There is a small one-story brick extension with a shed roof, attached to the rear of the house; the extension begins about four feet south of the northwestern corner of the west façade and continues until north of the central rear door. It is original and made of the same brick in the same common bond pattern. Above this extension, a single room addition, a bathroom, was added to the second story. On the north side of the extension, there is a small porch (about 4'x 4'). From this small porch, there is a rear door leading into the kitchen. Originally, there were two doors on the west façade, both on the first story. The first is located on the northern corner of the west wall and the second in the center of the west wall; however, in 1967, the center door was boarded up and a small addition was placed on the southern end of the existing brick extension. The front doors are double two-panel doors with sidelights and are almost identical. The only difference is that the downstairs front door has a rectangular transom. The doorstep of the first story is a large sandstone slab, which is unnoticeable until approaching the front door. Originally, the house had eight double-hung 6/6 windows on the east wall, four double-hung 6/6 windows on both sides and five on the west wall, for a total of twenty-one windows. All of the windows have sandstone lintels and sills. Today, the house has the original windows on the north, south, and east façades. However, with the addition to the extension, the window facing south was removed and replaced in the new addition; it no longer has a sandstone lintel or sill. The remaining windows on the west façade are original and untouched. The Bassel House has a low-pitched, variegated slate hipped roof with wooden eave brackets. Lastly, the house has two interior sloped brick chimneys with corbelled caps protruding from the roof.

The interior of the Bassel House has a three-unit floor plan with the small extension off of the northwest room. Each floor consists of a central hallway and two rooms (a front room and a back room) on each side. There are eight brick fireplaces with wooden mantles in the house—one in each room, except the extension. There is a main staircase in the central hallway, which has a handmade spindle banister. In addition, there is a hidden staircase running from the northwestern upstairs room to the kitchen that is located in the northwestern room of the downstairs. The Bassel House has rough hardwood floors and wood trim. "The trim for the interior finishing had been cut and partly installed when Union soldiers during the Civil War commandeered the lumber piled outside the house to use for firewood. Today, the woodwork in the rooms in the rear of the house is of walnut; and woodwork in the front rooms of the house is oak".³ The walls in the hallway are plastered in the original plaster, which contains pig bristles.⁴ However, after the town of Lost Creek flooded in 1985, the plaster in the four downstairs rooms was replaced with drywall. All of the rooms, except for the downstairs southwest room, have the original ceilings at the height of twelve feet. The downstairs southwest room has a ceiling height of ten feet; the ceiling was lowered after the flood in order to more efficiently heat this room.

The Bassel House contains architectural features very unique to Lost Creek and southern Harrison County. Among these features are the handmade bricks, the Queen Anne spindle work on the front porch, the original 6/6 double-hung windows and original slate roof, the unique pig bristle plaster, and original wood trim.

The Bassel House fulfills Criterion C for Architecture because it has remained relatively unaltered since it was completed in 1865.

It is the oldest example of an original residence in Lost Creek, West Virginia. The variegated slate hipped roof, the hand-made red bricks, the wood spindle work on the front porch, and the original interiors add to the unique architecture of this house. The period of significance is 1865, reflecting the date of the house's ultimate completion.

HISTORY OF THE PROPERTY:

The Bassel House is situated on 1.79 acres; this was part of the original 217.5 acres given to Benjamin Bassel by the Commonwealth of Virginia in the 1830s.¹ At Benjamin Bassel's death in 1858, his son, Daniel Bassel, inherited the land.² In 1860, Daniel Bassel started construction on the house that is still standing today. The architect was one Jack Cockrell. Due to the Civil War, the construction of the house lasted until 1865. The construction was slowed by the arrival of the Union soldiers in 1863. On May 1, 1863, the 3rd West Virginia Infantry, the 28th Ohio, and part of the Ewing's Batters and Bowen's troop under the command of Colonel Thompson arrived in Lost Creek to halt General Imboden's Confederate troops from advancing. Colonel Thompson and his troops erected two guns on Daniel "Squire" Bassel's property. The gunfire forced the Confederates to retreat to the east and south, however the Union soldiers remained on the property until May 4, 1863, when they received orders to return to Clarksburg, West Virginia. This scrimmage has been cited as the last confrontation of the Civil War in Harrison County, West Virginia.³ In February 1868, before Daniel Bassel's death, he deeded his property (217.5 acres and the house) to his children Louisa (through her trustee J.J. Burr), Burr, and Guy.⁴ By 1911, small plots had been sold from the original 217.5 acres leaving 185 acres. Then, for unknown purposes, on June 30, 1911, all of Daniel's children deeded ten acres and the house to their mother, Daniel's widow Louisa M. Bassel.⁵ At Louisa M.

Bassel's death on February 24, 1924, her heirs (Guy M., Blanche, Louise A., Mary Louise and Amy) inherited the house and ten acres.⁶ In 1945, the other heirs deeded their interest in the house and lot to Guy M. Bassel and his wife, Maud.⁷ Upon Guy M. Bassel's death in 1957, the house and land passed to his wife, Maude S. Bassel.⁸ On November 22, 1958, Maud S. sold the house and 10 acres to Guy's second cousin, Dana Bassel and his wife, Bernice.⁹ During the time that Dana and his wife owned the ten-acre lot, the acreage decreased to 1.79 acres. Lots were sold to George and Dorothy Dawson,¹⁰ David R. and Elsie Grace Hughes,¹¹ and the State Road Commission of West Virginia.¹² At Dana's death in 1992, his only surviving heir, his daughter Diane Bassel, inherited the house and 1.79 acres, although the land remains in Dana's name. Originally, Daniel Bassel farmed the acreage surrounding the Bassel House, however, his children were not interested in agriculture and some moved to cities throughout the United States, while others pursued business ventures locally. Dana Bassel, the most recent owner of the property, owned and operated a small garage in Lost Creek.

ARCHITECTURE:

Four major changes have occurred to the Bassel House in the past 140 years. The first two changes occurred in 1967. The first of these changes was a second floor rear addition. This was built above the existing brick extension at the rear of the house. At the same time, a small southern extension was added to the existing brick one. This extension eliminated the existing central back door and forced the window in the southern wall of the brick extension to be moved to the new wall of the wooden extension. With the moving of the window, the sandstone lintel and sill were removed. The third change was the replacement of the original plaster in the first floor rooms. The plaster was replaced with drywall after the town of Lost Creek flooded in 1985. With the addition of drywall, the ceiling in the southwest room on the first floor was lowered from 12 feet to 10 feet. This was done in order to allow for more efficient heating of the room.

Other than these few changes, the Bassel House has maintained its original integrity. It has the original variegated slate hipped roof. Slate roofs can be found on a number of houses in Lost Creek, however, this is the only one with a variegated design; the others are plain slate roofs. Also, the majority of houses in this area have gable roofs, not hipped roofs. Thus, the Bassel House has a unique roof for this area.

The house has the original hardwood floors, wood trim around the doors are original. The window glass shows occasional bubbles and waves, indicating it was hand crafted. The double two panel front doors are also original to the structure; these are the only doors of this type in Lost Creek. Both of the doors have sidelights and the first floor front door has a rectangular transom.

The second floor of the Bassel House and the central hallway of the first floor contain the original plaster, which was a mixture of pig bristles and plaster (also unique to the area). The hallway that connects the two central halls contains a hand-hewed railing. In addition, the house has a sandstone doorstep, which is unnoticeable until standing on the front porch. The wooden eave brackets and the handmade spindle work on the front porch are also unique and original. The wooden floor of the front porch is original, however, some places have been replaced to prevent injury.

SUMMARY:

Compared to other homes within Lost Creek, the Double-pile Daniel Bassel House is one of a kind. It is one of the very few brick houses, and by far the oldest, in Lost Creek and the only brick house to be constructed of handmade bricks, fired on location. In addition, it is the only residence in Lost Creek with a variegated slate roof. Lastly, the most striking characteristic of the Bassel House is that it has remained relatively unaltered throughout its lifetime. Other houses in Lost Creek have been renovated and have had additions built on which ruins the integrity of the original structure.

Run¹; thence running North 87° West 259 feet, more or less. Then South 20° East 75 feet, "more or less to a point in the intersection of" State Route 25²; thence following the right-of-way State Route 25 South 63° West 133 feet, more or less.³ Thence with the said State Route 25 South 51° West 206 feet, more or less to the beginning and containing 1.79 acres, more or less.⁴

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION:

Due to the construction of Interstate 79 and the use of unknown datums, a sketch of the lot could not be created. However, the lot was plotted by the State Road Commission and is included in this package, along with a copy of Harrison County's tax map for the property.

Nominated is the entire 1.79 acres and the buildings on the property; this includes the house, garage, and wooden storage building. These boundaries were selected because they are the current property boundaries.
