DESCRIPTION OF THE CABIN AND OF LOGS OF EXTERIOR APPEARANCE

The McCauley cabin is a one-story, gable-roof structure, measuring 18 ft. x 22 ft. The exterior is of rough-hewn logs, hewn on the interior to form a well-placed. The logs are laid in alternating rows and notched at the corners at a 45-degree angle. The logs were chinked with a mix of mud and straw. The exterior siding has been covered with a layer of cement. There is a small door opening on the east side, and a board and batten door with a 1/2" netting. On each end (S. and N.) of the cabin there is a small opening within with exterior board siding.

The interior is pine-plank. There are 3 logs round logs running between the poles of the cabin which support the roof. Attention is given to a wood outside the roof and a concrete floor. Concrete was also poured into trench around the exterior logs of the cabin.
