Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Hooper Historic District comprises some twenty-two architecturally and commercially significant buildings. Dating from the late 19th century, Hooper stands as a well preserved village of "American Renaissance" architecture incorporating elements of Romanesque and Italianate Revival styles. Hooper, located in the eastern part of Dodge County and with a population of over 200, retains the elements of a late 19th century village. The district consists primarily of commercial buildings constructed of local brick and cast iron facades still intact in the majority of the buildings (photo #6). A most interesting feature of Main Street is the tin canopy (ca. 1910) projecting over the sidewalk on several of the buildings (sites #41, 42, 43, 68--photos #5, 6, 15).

The Hooper Historic District consists entirely of one- and two-story brick commercial buildings with the exception of one frame commercial (site #62) and one residential structure (site #26). Presently, Hooper's commercial center is comprised of two banking institutions, one furniture store, several taverns, a grocery store, barber shop, drug store, public services including a library, city hall, and fire department, and other commercial structures. Three more recent structures, indicated as sites A-C, are listed as non-conforming, but are not considered intrusions because of their overall compatibility in terms of scale and materials.

Boundaries were drawn to include all structures similar in character and dating of late 19th century "American Renaissance" architecture. Certain properties in the business section of Hooper were excluded as they lacked historical qualities and served as intrusions. The decline in the concentration of significant structures and the merging of non-historical residential areas warranted the boundary lines to be drawn as indicated.

Buildings contributing to the character of the district.

- DD06-26. Tillman House (photo #18), east side Myrtle, (block 2, lot 15, original town: c. 1880's. Two-story frame with gable entrance; central chimney; Eastlake porch; two-story bay on side; two story addition on rear; built by Frank M. Tillman, significant figure in the early development of Hooper who came to town in 1880 and purchased a hotel (no longer extant) located on the present site of DD06-66.

- DD06-37. First National Bank (photo #9, far right), northeast corner Fulton and Main (block 1, lot 9, W $\frac{1}{2}$, original town): 1914. One-story brick with stone water-table and stone enhanced corbelled brick cornice; modern windows and entry; the Hooper bank, founded January 16, 1886, started out as a private banking house incorporated by John Heimrich, John Dern and Henry H. Looschen, with E. J. R. Burgh as the first cashier; in February of 1899 the bank was incorporated as the State Bank of Hooper and operated as such until March of 1900 when it became the First National Bank of Hooper (see also site #59).
- DD06-38. Dodge County Bank--Professional Building, (photo #1, 2), northwest corner Fulton and Main (block 2, lots 10-12, original town), 1899. Two-story brick on raised basement with pseudo-dentilled cornice; paired and single arched windows with "broken" segmentally arched hoods on second, segmental on first; prominent corner entry; founded in 1882 by T. W. Lyman who came to Hooper in 1871, and John Heimrich; first known as Lyman and Heimrich, bankers; the firm was succeeded by the Dodge County Bank in 1884, which became a leading institution not only in the banking interests of Hooper and Dodge County but also in eastern Nebraska.
- DD06-39. Commercial building (photo #2, 3), west side of Main (block 2, lots 8 & 9, original town), ca. 1902-03. Two story, brick over cast iron; vermiculated arch hoods on second; corbelled brick and pressed-metal cornice; double store; Fred L. Hoefner purchased the building in 1928 and started Hoefner Electric; still in business today.
- DD06-40. C. W. Klingbeil Building (photo #3), west side Main (block 2, lot 7, original town), 1890. Two story, brick over cast iron; arched pressed-metal hoods on second; corbelled brick and pressed metal cornice with segmental pediment; built by C. W. Klingbeil, a prominent businessman in general merchandise who came to Hooper in 1883 and started business one year later; original building lost in fire of January, 1890, but immediately rebuilt the present brick structure at a cost of over $8,000.
- DD06-41. Ancient Free and Accepted Masons Building (photo #3), west side Main (block 2, lots 4-6, original town), 1890. Two story brick; three stores; cast iron front; arched windows on second; pedimented, pressed-metal cornice; central store building constructed by the Lodge with flanking stores built by E. H. Airis; occupied by a saloon, general store and drug store, respectively; A.F. & A.M. Lodge, organized in 1878, still occupies the second floor of the two northernmost stores.

Builder/Architect

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Hooper Historic District is significant as the commercial center of a thriving agricultural community and for its outstanding nineteenth and early twentieth century commercial architecture.

The town of Hooper was platted by John I. Blair, February 15, 1871, on sections 17 and 20 of Township 19, Range 8 and was named for one of the officials of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway. The town of Hooper owes its origin to the building of the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Branch of the Northwestern System. Due to its location in the midst of a rich grain-raising section, the town's business prospered and Hooper became a significant commercial center. The population of Hooper is largely German. According to newspaper accounts of the time, Germany was a severe place to farm in the 1870's and 80's. As a result, many farmers immigrated to more promising farming regions in Nebraska. Significant numbers settled the Elkhorn River valley in Dodge and Cuming counties. Many of these people, and in the case of the Hooper immigrants, entire villages left Germany for the promise of less government and taxes on free or cheap land in America.

Hooper's Main Street, according to earliest record, has been extant as a commercial area since the year 1875. The town was legally incorporated in 1886, but since Hooper did not have its newspaper established until 1885, little is known of the 1870's Main Street buildings.

In 1884-1885, and 1886, several major fires brought about a town ordinance that all structures on Main Street must be of brick construction. Another fire in January of 1890 virtually eliminated the remaining frame buildings. This law was to vastly improve the quality of Hooper's Main Street as a frontier community, giving it a strong sense of unity through its design and construction of brick architecture. The west side of the main street provides the focal point of the district with its contiguous store fronts; mostly of brick, all of similar heights and vintage (c. 1890), and most with cast iron fronts.

The Hooper Historic District is significant to Nebraska's cultural heritage in that it stands as a well preserved example of 19th century commercial architecture. Hooper is one of the few Nebraska communities in which commercial building facades have retained their historic integrity. Commercially, Hooper continues to serve the surrounding countryside as the hub of business activity.
