The Hartford Seminary, built in 1839, is one of the oldest surviving buildings in Hartford, Kentucky.

It is believed that the first school in Hartford was established in 1792 and was held in a log cabin. The school system became so strengthened that demands were made upon the State Legislature for recognition. Thus a charter was granted to the school, and on November 15, 1805, Lot 56 of the original plat of the town was conveyed to the trustees of the Hartford Academy. Among these trustees were Charles Henderson, County and Circuit Clerk for forty years; and Dr. Charles McCrerry who performed the first known operation for the excision of the entire clavicle, in 1813. On 1820, another Legislative Act was passed naming a new group of trustees for the Academy and authorizing them to "enter" 6,000 acres which could not be located "west of the Tennessee River."

In 1839 a third act of the General Assembly instructed the trustees of Hartford Academy to transfer their land grant to the Hartford Seminary. This land played an important role in establishing Hartford Seminary. When the trustees of Hartford Seminary acquired legal title to the land, they sold it, receiving only a fraction of its value. However, the proceeds of this sale helped build the Hartford Seminary in 1839. The Hartford Seminary could perhaps be classified as a public school since it indirectly received public funds through the sale of lands allottedtto school purposes by the General Assembly. Other school expenses were covered by tuition fees paid by the students.

A prominent teacher of the Hartford Seminary was Ulysses Curran, father of the noted American artist, Charles Courtney Curran.

The alumnus of the Hartford Seminary who achieved the greatest national prominence was Richard Parks Bland, "father of the free-silver movement and forerunner of William Jennings Bryan." Congressman Bland was born near Hartford in 1835. He graduated from Hartford Seminary in 1854, taught school for a few years, then went to Missouri to practice law. "Silver Dick" Bland, as he was affectionately known by his supporters, was co-author of the famous Bland-Allison silver coinage bill passed by Congress in 1877. Bland was nearly chosen as the Presidential candidate at the Democratic Convention of 1896 in Chicago, leading William Jennings Bryan in the voting until the final ballot. Bland died in Missouri in 1899.

The Hartford Seminary, opened in 1839, educated both local students and students from all of the surrounding counties and many southern states. It was used for educational purposes until a new school was built in 1880. The building was sold for private use on March 30, 1880. The building, presently a private residence, is one of the oldest buildings in Hartford. The Ohio County Historical Society has expressed an interest in purchasing the 134 year old building to house an Ohio County Museum.
