Setting:

Quiet Dell School stands just off State Route 20 a short distance from an exit interchange with I-79. Graveled County Route 20/79 leads off the main road and the original entrance fronts on this drive on a low hillside. A lot in front of the school has a separate commercial building fronting on State Route 20.

The entrance today faces east, with a grass lawn in front and to the south. A pipe fence runs along the gravel drive. The modern wooden sheds and barn are to the SW and S sides. A gravel parking lot is behind the school to the west. Outside of the immediate defined boundaries are open fields to the west.

Architectural Description:

School 1922/1953

Contributing Building

The one-story wooden drop-sided building was constructed in two stages with the older section dating to 1922 having an entrance on the north side that opened into a vestibule with offices, and two classrooms. The second building phase in 1953 included a new entrance on the east side, two more classrooms and a kitchen. The roof is a low hip with a higher center ridge with small gable ends.

The east, or front facade, has a centered entrance with wide low steps leading to recessed double wooden doors having three horizontal lights and a large four row by six lights multi light transom overhead. Flanking the side of the doors are narrow double-hung sash windows with 4/4 lights. The right (north) side of the building is the older section with a rockfaced concrete block foundation. The set of windows for the front classroom is a ribbon of five openings with 6/6 double-hung sash windows. The left (south) side is the 1950s addition with concrete block foundation, and a ribbon of seven windows with 6/6 double-hung sash openings. On the exterior, concrete steps lead on both sides of the doorway to the lower level and bathrooms, with metal doors and 2/2 patterned glass window. The steps under the older section have been cut into the foundation with concrete block in-fill and a small brick header course.

The north side of the building has the older entrance with concrete steps leading to a portico with drop-siding for the closed rails, tapered wooden posts and a low gable roof. The portico rests on concrete piers and at the moment is supported with extra wooden supports pending renovation. The entrance has double wooden doors with three horizontal lights and a multi-light transom. To each side of the portico are two pairs of low four light windows. The doorway opens into a small vestibule with a cloak room and principals office being located on this facade of the building. A small addition dating to the 1940s or 1950s is on the southwest corner with a low gable roof, wooden drop-siding and a concrete block foundation. The addition has a metal door facing the porch, and on the rear are two sets of windows with a horizontal 3 light opening and two 4 light openings. On the rear, or south elevation, there is evidence that the addition has been extended with a change at the foundation and roof levels.

On the rear, or west side, are three single door openings having horizontal wooden panels and a single horizontal light, with a wooden handicapped ramp providing access. To the left on the older section is a ribbon of four windows with 6/6 double-hung openings and two single metal doorways (one to a classroom and one to the center kitchen). Immediately to the right of the kitchen doorway is a triple window and a space before a single window, all with 6/6 double-hung openings. A third doorway leads into a classroom. The rear windows on this room have been covered, and there is an opening into an attached greenhouse.

The south side of the building has two metal fire doors leading from the rear of the classrooms. These open onto a wooden handicapped ramp. There are no windows on this facade of the school.

The interior of the building has a center vestibule which is concrete just inside the doorways with steps leading to restrooms and storage on the lower levels. Wooden steps lead up to the main floor with four rectangular classrooms with original blackboards, baseboards and windows in place. Some of the original drop lights are still in place with glass globes. Linoleum has been placed over the soft pine floors in the two south classrooms. Centered off the hallway and vestibule is the kitchen with two windows opening into hallway with 6/6 double-hung sash windows. These opened to allow food service to the children. A faculty room was added off the kitchen in 1960. The old entrance opened into a small vestibule with four doors. The cloak room and principals office was located on the old entrance facade, and the two classrooms were behind these rooms.

Outbuildings

Three non-contributing buildings

Three wooden buildings were built on site for outdoor activities. These modern buildings have vertical and angled siding and rolled asphalt roofs.

The play equipment from the 1960s has not been included in the count of buildings.

Summary:

Although of a simple design, the school maintains its original materials and historic characteristics. The old portion of the school is easily identifiable. The 1953 addition was sympathetic to the original design and did not sacrifice the earlier classroom space.

Quiet Dell School is significant under Criterion A for Education and Criterion C for Architecture. The period of significance begins with construction in 1922 and includes the extension to the building in 1953. Because of the closeness of the 50 year period, Criterion Consideration G is not being used.

Harrison County's Educational System

Some of the earliest schools in western Virginia were subscription schools that sprang up on the frontier. Patronized by the upper middle class, the schools were often controlled by the trustees of the school with little attention by the state. Randolph Academy was chartered in 1788 and located in Clarksburg. It was to receive 1/6 of the survey fees from Ohio, Monongalia, Harrison and Randolph counties for its support. The dream was to establish an institution west of the mountains and north of the Little Kanawha River that would be as important as William and Mary College was to the Tidewater area. The contract on a building was not let until 1793 but by the 1840s the school had suffered financial problems and the land was transferred to the Northwestern Virginia Academy in 1843 which erected a new building.

The History of Harrison County states that Martin's Gazetteer of Virginia published in 1833 lists forty-two common schools as existing in the counties of western Virginia; of these there were four in Harrison; two were located in Clarksburg, and one in both Bridgeport and Shinnston. The Census of 1850 lists Harrison County as having 71 schools enrolling 330 students. In 1865 the free schools began in Harrison County. There were about 65 schools taught that winter for a three month term. Each year a teachers institute was held for the continuing education of the teachers. By 1906 there were 260 schools with lengths of terms from six to nine months. Graded schools had been established and Clay District voted to have a high school in Shinnston. This made four high schools in the county.

Community History

The community of Quiet Dell was settled after 1848 when a turnpike, present day State Route 20, connected Nutter Fort and Buckhannon. Known originally as Needle's Eye, the community had a mill along Elk Creek which drew business and a post office. A map of the area from 1886 identifies the residential and commercial buildings in the town, including the church and schoolhouse which were on the north side of the turnpike.

Land for a new school was deeded by J.D. Pickens in September 1922 for $550. The school was to serve the Elk Magisterial District, with students attending from as far away as Craigmoor and Johnstown. The current schoolhouse was constructed by local builders in 1922 on a low hillside off State Route 20. The building had two classrooms with grades 1 to 4 in the "Little Room" and grades 5 to 8 in the "Big Room." Photographs in the book Harrison County Heritage show that many of the smaller school buildings in the county were frame, while the larger schools in the towns were of brick construction. There is some similarity of style between a few of the buildings, with the older section of Quiet Dell most resembling the Romines Mills

School with Grades 1-4.

Principal Harriett Cookman is the first known administrator of the school in 1924. Teachers boarded with local families. There was no interior plumbing in the old school. Water was available from a well at the Hansford house directly below the school fronting on the old turnpike. A blacksmith shop owned by Charlie Longstreth was also located below the school where a commercial lot is still occupied today.

One of the early extracurricular activities at the school was the local 4-H Club which started soon after the building was built. Dr. Keith Pickens was the first director of the club between his years of 1922-1926. Agricultural education was emphasized, with students participating in national and state activities as well as local county level competitions.

During the year of 1935-37, the grounds near the school were used by Camp Harrison (Camp SCS-7) a Civilian Conservation Camp (CCC) active in the county. The camp may also have availed itself of the use of the school at times. Camp Harrison was occupied between July 10, 1935, by CCC Company 2592, which included roughly 200 men, until December 15, 1937. The camp site was in the vicinity of I-79 today and the last remaining building was removed by the construction of the highway. The men of the camp performed soil erosion control work on private farms in the area. In September 1937 technical staff were transferred to other camps and Camp Harrison was vacated. Although it was recommended to use the camp as a receiving hospital for tubercular patients, funds were not available. Five of the buildings were transferred to the Soil Conservation Service, and the remaining portable buildings were shipped to the Eighth Corps Area, Bloomfield, NM for army use. Today no extant resources remain of the CCC Camp.

By the 1950s, enrollment at the school had grown so that the building was expanded. The rear of the building was extended to include a kitchen, two classrooms and a new entrance facing east. The lower level provided restrooms and maintenance facilities. The school had grades one through six until it was closed in 1970.

For the next five years the building was used for administrative purposes by the Board of Education. An area Kindergarten was organized and housed in the building from 1975 until 1989.

Classes for special education - special living skills training, speech therapy offices and training were also held there from 1978-1990.

Today the building is still owned by the County Board of Education, but is occupied by West Virginia Mountain Products, Inc. This heritage arts education center also has a juried craft co-op. Outdoor activities are carried on in the outbuildings constructed in 1991.

Summary:

Quiet Dell School is a good example in Harrison County of a small four room frame school building from the early to mid - 20th century. The original section was completed in 1922 to serve the community. Extended in 1953, as enrollment increased, the school was used for multi-education purposes until 1990.
