Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The building known as the Karel Jonas House is actually the project of two building campaigns, one by Jonas, and the other by merchant Peter Stoffel. The original house was built for Karel Jonas about 1878.¹ Jonas purchased lots 15 and 16 in Block 51 for $525 in 1874, but continued living on North Wisconsin north of Hubbard. He is first listed in the City Directory as living on the southeast corner of North Erie and Barker Streets in 1879.² The assessed value for the two lots also tripled between 1878 and 1879.

Jonas and his wife sold 1337 to Peter Stoffel in 1894 for $3,350. Stoffel's expansion of the house took place some time between 1901 and 1908, probably in 1901 or 1902, during which time the assessed value more than doubled.

The original house was a two-story, gable-roofed, ell-shaped brick house with a one-story brick wing in the rear. The main entrance to the house was through the angle of the ell where there was a long porch on the southern elevation.

Basically, the style of the house was Italianate. It had, and has, segmentally-arched windows with label moldings of rowlock and header bricks. The deep eaves of the roof contain large triangular wooden brackets, alternating paired and single. Unlike most brick houses on the northside, the Jonas house was faced with stretcher bond rather than common.

The Stoffel addition filled the angle of the ell, added a three-sided two-story bay to the south, and widened and raised the rear wing. A small pedimented portico was added the the to the entrance, now on the street elevation.

Stoffel's addition is curved on the southeast corner, the wall being formed entirely of header bricks. A leaded-glass window makes this curve on the first floor, as does a blind arcade of stubby Doric columns and flat basket archives on the second. The verges of the roof are also curved. 1 Section Co

Atop the corner section is a round turret with conical roof tipped by a pointed sheetmetal finial. The sides of the turret contain alternating squares of window and panels with relief fleur-de-lis.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

1137 North Erie Street is significant as it is the principal residence of Karel Jonas, the leading Bohemian-American of his age and a major political, literary, and ethnic figure in the late 19th century.

Karel Jonas was born in Malesow, Bohemia on October 30, 1840. He received his education at the Polytechnic Institute and also attended lectures at Prague University. In 1859, while a student, Jonas wrote The Present Condition of Austrian Colleges and Academies, a critique of the middle-school system of the Hapsburg Empire. The contents of this work so offended the Austrian government that it was seized before publication and Jonas expelled from school and persecuted.³

In 1860, he travelled to London where he learned English and wrote for Bohemian periodicals. In June, 1863, Jonas was offered the editorship of Slavie (The Slav), founded by Frank Korizek of Racine, Wisconsin in 1860.⁴ Jonas accepted the offer and held the post of editor for some thirty-two years.

Jonas was a highly competent linguist and as early as 1864 published a work entitled A Spelling Book and First Reader for Czech-Slavic Youth in America. This was followed in 1865 with the adult version, The Bohemian-American Interpreter, a pronunciation guide and modified grammar with a practical section that included such everyday activities as letter-writing and shopping. A revised edition, The New American Interpreter appeared in 1884 and went through nineteen editions by 1922.

Of greater significance was Jonas' lexicographical work, the Czech-English Dictionary with Full English Pronunciation Guide, the first edition of which appeared in 1876. This was the first known Czech-English dictionary of its kind.⁶ It had an extraordinary longevity; a sixth edition was published as recently as 1951. Jonas' final grammar was published in 1890: Bohemian Made Easy: A Practical Bohemian Course for English- Speaking People.

Jonas also provided other types of practical assistance to his Czech countrymen who were struggling to adapt to American life. In 1878, he published a farmers' almanac, the Golden Book for the Farmer, which was a compilation of extracts from Slavie. In 1882, Jonas edited and published American Law: A Collection of Especially Important Laws and Legal Commentaries for Czech-American Settlers. This was a noteworthy digest of information dealing with immigration and citizenship law, taxation, property, wills, and vital statistics registration. Jonas also appealed to his countrymen through Slavie, in which, according to the noted Czech-American historian, Thomas Capek, "his word was law and his decision admitted of no appeal."

8. Significance

Jonas was a Republican until 1872 when he refused to support Grant for a second term. He then became active in Democratic party administrative affairs and policy making, serving as a member of the Democratic State Central and Executive Committees in Wisconsin.

In April, 1876, Jonas entered elective politics for the first time by winning a seat on the Racine common council, representing that city's predominately-Czech fourth ward.⁸ From 1878 to 1880 he served as president of the council. During this period, he also won a seat in the state assembly (November, 1877).

As a state legislator, Jonas sponsored legislation to compel employers to pay wages in lawful money and he strongly advocated liberalization of the bankruptcy law. He introduced a bill that improved the state's child labor law, and, more importantly, proposed the first legislation for the Bureau of Labor and Industrial Statistics, the forerunner of the Wisconsin Industrial Commission.⁹

In 1882, Jonas won election to the state senate and served in this body during the 1883 and 1885 legislative sessions. He continued to pursue child labor reform, wage collection, and the rights of debtors, but, on the whole, he was less active in the senate than he had been in the assembly.

Jonas was elected lieutenant-governor under George W. Peck in 1890, serving as the "ethnic" member of the Democratic team which was hoping to benefit from the reaction stemming from the passage of the Bennett Law in 1889, a compulsory school statute that also required instruction in the English language. Although a free-thinker, Jonas opposed the Bennett Law as an unnecessary interference with private rights and individual liberty, but this opposition was probably half-hearted. Peck and Jonas won re-election in 1892 but Jonas soon tired of his ceremonial post and resigned in April, 1894 and turned to the patronage of the federal government as he had done once before.

Jonas had longed to return to Bohemia for some time, which inspired him to seek the consular post in Prague. He did so aggressively, soliciting the assistance of President Cleveland's postmaster general, William F. Vilas of Madison. Within six weeks of Cleveland's inauguration, Jonas had the offer in his pocket, accepting what actually amounted to a minor post, on April 24, 1885. However, he was unable to assume his duties until January 12, 1887, due to the opposition of Austria-Hungary, which felt that Jonas had been "too much mixed up in Austrian politics," through his anti-Hapsburg editorials in Slavie and by way of his contact with one of the leaders of the Czech nationalist movement, Julius Gregr of the "Young Czechs."¹¹

As consul to Prague, Jonas performed his duties diligently. During his term he aided his brethmen, providing them with information on farming techniques developed in the United States that might be of help to the Czech farmer as well as other technical data which was provided through a library he had set up at the consulate for use by the Czechs. However, Jonas became outspokenly critical of some of the behavior of his countrymen, especially the dual nationals who avoided the responsibilities of citizenship.¹²

Jonas held the Prague consular post until July 15, 1889, following the ascendance of the Republicans once again. Later, he served as consul to St. Petersburg, and, in his final days, to Krefeld, Germany, where he died on January 15, 1896. He was buried near Prague.¹³
