Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Entered on the eastern side of U. S. Highway 61 South, about twelve miles south of Natchez, China Grove is situated on an eminence overlooking Second Creek and a plantation of 228 acres. The vernacular, one-and-a-half story, frame plantation dwelling is set upon brick foundation piers. The gable roof features a wide overhang that embraces the three, outside-end chimneys, two of which are located on the northerly elevation and one on the southerly elevation of the house. The westerly facade of the house is fronted by a gallery supported by unmolded box columns which were once linked by an unsophisticated railing composed of three horizontal boards, now missing but to be replaced during restoration. In the centermost bays of the four-bay facade are transomed doorways filled with unmolded, four-panel doors that are flanked by almost floor-length windows filled with nine-over-nine, double-hung sash and closed by original shutter blinds. The interior plan is a single-pile plan, two rooms across, with no central passage that also features small "cabinet" rooms flanking a recessed rear gallery. The interior surfaces of the exterior walls were originally plastered, but the partition walls are constructed of matched boards. All interior door and window surrounds are plain and unmolded with mitered corners, the four-panel doors are unmolded, and the bases are beaded with two fascia. The two major rooms feature a molded chair rail and ceilings with exposed beams that were never plastered. All original wooden pilastered mantel pieces have survived. Much of the original decorative scheme is also intact with a wainscoting achieved by paint in one "cabinet" room and a baseboard effect achieved by paint on wall sections of "cabinet" rooms and the recessed rear gallery where no baseboard was installed. The stairway to the second story is entered from the rear gallery through a board-and-batten door and runs in a steep, straight flight in a westerly direction to terminate in one of two, unfinished rooms. The property contains one nineteenth-century outbuilding which is a small, gabled roof tenant house with board-and-batten siding and front gallery.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

China Grove derives its primary significance from its rarity as the Southern plantation residence of a black family who rose from a position as valued and esteemed slaves to become prosperous citizens of the post-Civil War South. The vernacular form and details, some of them unique and others strongly associated with black architecture, combine with the outstanding integrity to give the building architectural significance as well. In 1854, white planter James Railey purchased China Grove Plantation which adjoined Railey's own Oakland Plantation (Adams County Chancery Court Box 181). In 1861, Railey specified in his will that his slaves August and Sarah and their children were to be exempted from the settlement of his other property and, that at the death of his wife, they were to become the property of his brother who "will treat them with kindness, and give them all the comfort they require" (Will Book D:153). In James Railey's probate papers is an inventory of his estate that lists August and Sarah Mazique and their seven children with their ages and a monetary value assigned to each (Probate Box 126). Stylistically, the China Grove residence dates from 1850 to 1870 and was probably constructed not long after Railey acquired the plantation in 1854. The vernacular quality of the house and its proximity to the plantation gin indicate that it was probably constructed for and/or by August Mazique, who could possibly have served as Railey's plantation overseer. In 1869, August Mazique purchased China Grove at public auction after the Railey heirs lost the property in a chancery court suit (Deed Book QQ:232 and RR:148). After purchasing China Grove, the Mazique family prospered to the extent, that by the end of the nineteenth century, they were among the largest landowners in the southwestern section of Adams County. August Mazique's son Alexander eventually purchased Oakland Plantation, the home of his former master James Railey. In 1883, after the death of August Mazique, the 628-acre China Grove Plantation was partitioned by family members with the present 228-acre tract being allotted to widow Sarah and son Otey (Deed Book YY:110). This dower portion remained the residence of members of the Mazique family until 1980, when it was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Davis. Mr. and Mrs. Davis are to be commended for their sympathetic restoration of this exceedingly rare example of a former slave's plantation residence. The architectural integrity and the integrity of setting are outstanding, and China Grove may possibly be the only intact plantation with a history of black ownership in the state of Mississippi.

Verbal boundary description and justification See attached map of Partition of China Grove Plantation. The nominated property is shown as lot 3, outlined in red, consisting of 228 acres. The 228-acre tract has been intact since 1883, the integrity of setting is outstanding, and China Grove may possibly be the only intact black-owned plantation in Mississippi.
