STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Shropshire House is significant as an architectural standout as well as its having been the home of several important individuals-it has been called by architectural historian Rexford Newcomb "perhaps the most interesting house in Georgetown," Newcomb's comments as published in Architecture in Old Kentucky refer to the house as "a long, narrow, one story white brick edifice. Midway of the original facade, a pretty tetrastyle Ionic portico shelters a fanlighted doorway which is somewhat Federal in pattern, but trimmed inside with Greek Revival woodwork. This door with double leaves still retains its ancient bar. An arch, borne on fluted Ionic columns, spans the central hall. The front windows are unique consisting of double hung six pane sash with doors beneath them which open to the floor. These are flanked with long, shuttered sidelights.

The house was built in 1814 by John C. Buckner and his wife, Mary, daughter of General Richard M. Gano. It was sold at auction in 1818 for $2,032, being purchased as the home for John T. Johnson and his wife, Sophia Lewis, Johnson had at that time lost his 150 acre farm on South Elkhorn a result of being security of debts of persons during the financial depression of 1818, and was a member of the Kentucky legislature. In 1820, B22 & B24 he was elected to Congress. In 1831 he left the practice of law and politics to join the ministry of the Disciples of Christ, led to the Union of that body also known as the Reforming Baptists and became one of the foremost clergymen of that body corporately known as the Christian Churches.

In 1828 Mrs. Johnson's trustee sold the property to Robert J. Ward, whose plantations in the deep South and investments in Kentucky made him one of the wealthiest men in the State. The family lived in the house six years. Their daughter Sallie spent the first six years of her life there. She became one of the best known beauties of the South, and artist Alexander Healy declared her "the most exquisite woman that he had ever painted." Dr. Thomas D. Clark of the University of Kentucky recorded her story in The Kentucky as the girl who was "born to be a princess."

The Wards sold the house in 1833 to George W. Johnson, attorney who in 1861 was to become the first Confederate (provisional) governor of Kentucky. He was killed in the Battle of Shiloh. In 1835 Johnson sold the house to John

#8 Statement of Significance

C. Miller. Miller owned 2,000 acres of Mississippi plantation land and worked from 600 to 800 slaves. After rebuilding the house, he died in 1840 with his widow, the former Jane Holmes, continuing to live there the rest of her life.

This house was bought by the Shropshire family in 1918 and has been owned successively by J. Gano Shropshire, his son Grover Shropshire and the children of Grover Shropshire.
