View of the Vista del Arroyo Hotel complex from the Colorado Street Bridge, looking east. The west side of the original 1920 north wing can be seen as its picture windows overlook the arroyo.

The subtle Spanish Colonial Revival detailing on the main Vista del Arroyo "tower" building is most pronounced on the belvedere tower. This view of the decorated tower is from the west. For many years the tower was illuminated at night, creating a dramatic vista from the Colorado Street Bridge.

View of the east facade of the 1930 main tower building from South Grand Avenue.

The one-story projection from the main facade was originally a rounded morning room. The original pergola approach was removed; however a few of the columns remain at the entrance.

This current view of the "Venetian Plunge" (swimming pool, 35 x 35 feet) and bungalows from the Colorado Street Bridge shows how overgrown the terraced gardens are. Nestled against the steeply sloped arroyo, the Vista hotel complex formed a series of steps from the Colorado Street Bridge.

A view of the interior "lobby" space of the Maxwell house, looking east. The painted ceiling and intricately detailed stairway are particularly elegant. The interior of the Maxwell house is relatively intact.

These bungalows that are clustered around the west side of the main tower building at the Vista del Arroyo were designed to open out to the arroyo. Originally these bungalows had large porches with canvas awnings.

Negative location unknown. Original photograph is located in the Pasadena Survey Office, City Hall.

The view is from just south of the pergola entrance looking west to the main entrance of the hotel, as designed by Marston in 1920. The photograph shows the central campanile and south wing which were demolished in 1930.
