Meadow River Lumber Building Greenbrier County, WV

The Meadow River Lumber Company Building is located along a side lane of exhibit halls on the State Fairgrounds of West Virginia. This small one-room building has characteristics of the popular Bungalow style. It was constructed in 1928 as a showcase of the Meadow River Lumber Company's products.

The frame building is one story in height with a small center front gable rising from the roofline. The building sits on brick piers above an open crawl space. A center gable dormer breaks the front of the asphalt gable roof, and there are small rectangular vents in each gable end. The front facade has a full porch with four tapered wood posts and a wooden deck.

An early advertisement in a "Greenbrier Valley Fair" Premium booklet shows that the porch posts were once half their length and sat on brick supports. These brick supports once served as foundation piers for the front facade. At some point the house was rotated on its piers to face a side paved lane. It is suspected that the porch posts were changed at this time since the brick supports would have been broken by the move. The "x" railing may also have been removed at the same time.

The front elevation has a center single bay, or doorway, and side lights with beveled vertical lights popular in the Bungalow house styles of the time. The side elevations have paired 3/1 double-hung sash windows. The gable ends and the front dormer have wood shingles with alternating rows of flat and pointed shingles. Low brackets are under the eaves of the house. The rear has low horizontal three light windows which once flanked the chimney. The brick chimney was removed when the house was rotated, and the exterior wall of the house covered with siding.

The interior has one room with a wooden floor and plaster walls. Along the rear wall is a center brick fireplace and hearth with flanking bookcases, again a popular feature in the Bungalow housing styles of the 1920s. The mantel and glass fronted paired bookcases were constructed of oak trim pieces reflecting the variety of trims produced by Meadow River Lumber Company. The mantel has broken panels with a dentil trim under the mantel shelf. The room also has a oak cove moulding at the ceiling line, two dado strips which encircle the walls at chair height and below the wall light fixtures, and a beveled baseboard. The room is complemented with four original side wall lights.

Constructed as a fair display to demonstrate the product line of the Meadow River Lumber Company, the building has remained on the fairgrounds since it was erected in 1928. The building remains intact except for the changes necessitated by the building's rotation on its piers.

The Meadow River Lumber Company of Rainelle constructed this small building as a sales showcase for their trims, moldings, and flooring for the Greenbrier Valley Fair in 1928. The building has remained a feature of the fairgrounds and is used for museum displays during the yearly state fair week. The architecture reflects the building materials produced by the lumber company, including popular features in the housing styles of the time. The building is significant under Criteria A for Commerce and Criteria C for Architecture.

Meadow River Lumber Company

The Meadow River Lumber Company ("MERILUCO") was founded in 1906 by two brothers, Thomas and John Raine in a valley at the foot of Sewell Mountain in Greenbrier County. The town of Rainelle developed near the site and took its name from the brothers. The two brothers pioneered the use of the band saw and in time the firm became the largest mill producing hardwood materials in the world, with three band saws operating under one roof. At its peak, the mill averaged about 20 million board feet per year and employed about 500 people.

Wood flooring was the major Meadow River product. However, the planing mill division made many types of wood trim, including stair treads and risers, baseboards, window frames, door jambs, and molding. Beginning in 1932, the mill produced millions of hardwood heels for women's shoes over a 30 year period, and at some point produced ship beams. Some of their most unusual products include chestnut coffins, special crates for glass, white ash frames for Packard cars, and maple for Ford car bodies.

Records show that Meadow River operated a successful furniture division until labor shortages during World War II forced it to close. The mill was documented by HABS/HAER before being demolished in 1975.

Greenbrier Fair develops into State Fair

The first record of a small fair in Lewisburg appeared in the form of a letter in 1858 from O.W. Kittinger of Alderson, WV. He wrote, "I saw there many fine horses, cattle, sheep an hogs confined in rail pens". This first Greenbrier County Fair was small and consisted only of one main building which housed products produced on local farms.

More than a decade passed before the next fair was held in Lewisburg in 1869, and another eight years until one was held in Alderson, in 1877. Fairs were held in 1892 and 1893 on the outskirts of the growing town of Lewisburg, on the road to the railroad boom town of Ronceverte. For the first time, the category of industry was added to agriculture during the "Greenbrier Industrial Exposition". The popularity of these fairs and various exhibitions led to the development of the Shorthorn Association show organized by the cattlemen of the Greenbrier Valley region. This exhibition was held in 1917 on the Watts Farm, located about a mile west of the present fairgrounds. After three successful shorthorn shows, a local group of public spirited men decided that an annual fair should be held in Greenbrier County between Ronceverte and Lewisburg.

On March 19, 1921, the Greenbrier Valley Fair was chartered. The original incorporators decided from the start that the fair would be a nonprofit organization, meaning all monies made by the corporation would go directly back into the fair for employment, improvements on the grounds, new exhibits each year, and other areas that required financial support. In 1941, the board appealed to the State Legislature to be recognized as the State Fair and realizing the unparalleled popularity of the event, the legislature passed an act proclaiming it the State Fair of West Virginia.

Meadow River Lumber Company Building

Constructed in 1928 by the Meadow River Lumber Company at the Greenbrier Valley Fair, this building now houses the State Fair museum. Originally the building was a sales "showcase" for Meadow River's most important products - trims, moldings, and flooring for houses. Meadow River was an important part of the fair and continued to exhibit through the 1930s. When first constructed, the house faced north and was located adjacent to its present site. Photo documentation shows that it was eventually moved to face east. The chimney was removed at that time as well as part of the porch fence and brickwork.

The architecture of the building is significant as an expression of the materials produced by the Meadow River Lumber Company. Erected by the company workmen, the building is comprised of lumber and trim produced by the firm. The building follows a simple house plan, including some of the features found in the Bungalow styles of the 1920s. This includes the exterior door with its vertical lights and side lights, and the center fireplace with flanking bookcases.

Used by the Meadow River Lumber Company for many years the building developed into a space appropriate for museum exhibits. Each year exhibits of artifacts interpreting the fair history are exhibited in display cases or in the building's bookcases. The building is also called the State Fair Museum.

Summary

The Meadow River Lumber Company Building supports the notion that fairs have and will continue to be a showcase of trade and commerce. Furthermore, it is a reminder of the tremendous impact that Meadow River Lumber Company once had on Greenbrier County's economy.
