Section No. 7 Page 1

Thompson/Hansen house, Brigham City, Box Elder County, UT

Narrative Description

Brigham City's Main Street running north/south through the entire town, is now about 50 per cent residential structures outside the central business district although many of the remaining residential buildings house businesses. The mature, densely planted street trees form a strong, shady corridor down the length of Main Street and help maintain a more residential feel. The Thompson/Hansen House is located on a level, somewhat constricted lot on the east side of Main Street one block north of the major civic block containing the Box Elder County Courthouse, Brigham City Carnegie Library, and Brigham City Fire Station/City Hall, all listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The Thompson/Hansen House has relatively modern commercial structures to each side which unfortunately reduce the historic character of its setting. New landscaping, proposed as part of the on-going restoration project, will buffer the house from its neighbors. A small, single vehicle frame garage (c.1923) was located about twenty feet northeast of the house. It had been substantially altered, including being lengthened about four feet, and has been removed as part of the current restoration project.

The one-and-one-half story Thompson/Hansen House has evolved in configuration and now represents a double cross-wing house type. The original center section (built c.1860s) is adobe and was later painted to resemble fired clay brick. The two cross-wings (c.1880) at the north and south ends of the original building were built of good quality, reddish brown brick, recently cleaned of a masking layer of white paint. The foundations of the cross-wings are either roughly formed stone or simply field stone which were heavily pointed to simulate ashlar stone with a beaded mortar joint (see Photo No.2). The foundations were completely plastered many years ago possibly at the same time the decorative elements (bargeboard, cresting, porches and balustrades) were removed (c.1923).

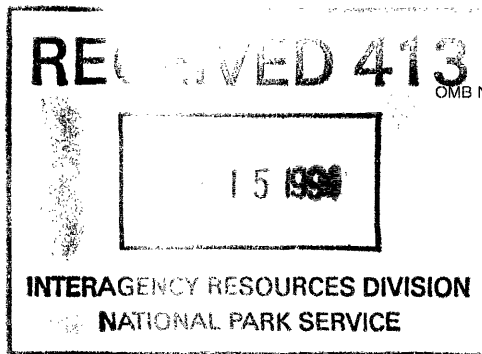

The interior is as rigorously symmetrical as the exterior. The original adobe house with a central door flanked by windows, is divided east/west by the c.1923 stair. The main level of the two brick cross-wings are each a single large space with uniform openings. The rear additions are also symmetrical about the east/west center line. On the second level, the single room above the original section has low knee walls (approximately 3 feet tall) and low ceiling height. A central door once again opens onto the restored second level front porch. Each of the cross-wings on the second level is divided into a front and rear room (formerly bedrooms) with knee walls and ceilings taller than the central connector.

Photographs 3 and 4 show the house in the early stage of restoration. The altered, bungalow-era central porch has been removed. The original two level porch had been greatly altered including removal of the decorative elements, encasing the original chamfered columns with flat 1x wood and replacing the second level with a sloped shed roof. On the interior, a central stair was added c.1923 and the house divided into two dwelling units although the basic historic floor plan remained. The rear one story additions consist of a central brick section (built after 1917 based on Sanborn maps) and small frame enclosed porches (c.1925) at each end. They enclose original window and door openings on the brick cross-wings and rear brick addition and illustrate the evolution of the house. These additions are being retained and restored in their current configuration.

The current restoration project is returning many aspects of the building to the original condition shown in the historic photos. Wood frame double hung windows are being installed (paired one-over-one double hung windows on the main level gable ends and two-over-two double hungs on the sides and second level gable ends) along with re-created decorative wood bargeboard, pendants and finials, the two level porch and porch balustrades and ridgetop cresting (executed in cast aluminum for durability). Nearly all of the exterior historic character and features of the house visible in the historic photos is being restored. On the interior, new mechanical systems are being carefully installed to minimize visual impact to the historic spaces. The simple interior historic materials (painted and stained wood floors; painted door and window casings; beadboard, plaster walls and ceilings; and wood panel doors) are being repaired, restored and/or re-created as needed. The c.1923 bathrooms are being retained and updated for use as restrooms for future commercial/office tenants.

Narrative Statement of Significance

The Thompson/Hansen House is architecturally significant as the only remaining residential example of the Gothic Revival architectural style in Brigham City, Utah. The structure is also significant as one of only six surviving double cross-wing residences in the city, and the only one retaining its architectural integrity. It is noteworthy for its historically accurate, re-created details including gothic finials and pendants, roof cresting, incised bargeboard trim, and an elaborate porch with incised picket-like balusters. The restored house is an unusually elaborate residential example of the Gothic Revival style in Utah.

Brigham City is a beautiful and neatly arranged community located 59 miles north of Salt Lake City, presently boasting a population of 14,007.<sup>1</sup> It is nestled in the western base of the northern Wasatch Mountains and has always been noted as one of the premier fruit-growing regions in the state. The area was settled in 1851 by Mormon pioneers, most of whom were recent converts from England and Wales. By 1853, Mormon leaders in Salt Lake City began to funnel immigrants from Denmark to the city, a practice which continued for some time and resulted in a large and heavily Scandinavian-American community.

In 1853, Brigham Young assigned LDS church apostle Lorenzo Snow to direct affairs in the new city. Under his direction in the late 1860s, one of the most aggressive and all-encompassing Mormon economic cooperatives was established, boasting over 40 manufacturing and retail branches. When surveyed, the city was laid out in a grid pattern which allowed for very wide streets. More important to the self-sufficient settlers was the allotment of generously-sized city lots which were useful as large garden and orchard spaces or as very small farms in the heart of the city. In these aspects, Brigham City was typical of many other early Mormon communities. Throughout the 19th century, Brigham City remained distinctly and wholly Mormon in its layout, population, and cooperative economy.<sup>2</sup>

The history of the Thompson/Hansen House begins with George Gilbert (1816-1908) and his wife Mary Blackwell Gilbert (1813-1887) who were both natives of Cornwall County, England, and were early converts to the Mormon faith -- George in 1852, and Mary in 1854. The couple, with their family consisting of three sons and one daughter, immigrated from England to Utah in the mid-1850s. By the time the 1860 census was taken, the entire family was settled in Brigham City. Gilbert was a blacksmith and farmer. It appears that he built or had built a simple 1-1/2 story rectangular adobe house (now forming the center section between the two cross-wings) probably sometime in the 1860s. Unfortunately, little more is known about Gilbert's involvement with the property, as land records were not kept until 1870. After a recorder's office was established, George Gilbert received (on 18 May 1870) a proper title for plat A, block 29, lot 3 from Brigham City mayor Chester Loveland after paying a filing fee of $1.40. When Gilbert sold the property on 24 November 1879 to James Thompson, he was paid $250.00,<sup>3</sup> a sum which reflected the presence of the modest structure on the property.

James Thompson (1844-1915) was also a Mormon, having joined the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Denmark in 1858. After immigrating to Brigham City in 1862, Thompson set up shop as a master carpenter and builder. After purchasing the small adobe house from Gilbert, Thompson added flanking brick wings which gave the building its present configuration. He then lavished the house with elaborate gothic trim which would have been too expensive for most of Brigham City's residents to afford, but was possible for a cabinet maker to do on his own residence. Thompson owned the structure for just two years. His reason for moving so soon probably involved the need for more space for his growing family, which by the time Thompson sold the house in November 1881 included three wives and ten living children. Thompson's 1915 obituary noted that "...he erected many of the beautiful homes that have made this a city of homes and in them he leaves a monument to his skill." Thompson was survived by four wives and 15 children.<sup>4</sup>

The new owner, Willard Snow Hansen (1856-1927) paid Thompson $1500.00 for the enlarged residence. At the time of purchase on 1 November 1881, Hansen had been married to Maria Larsen (1857-1892) for six years and was the father of three sons. Besides farming, he helped his father Christian Hansen run a large dairy and cheese-making operation for Brigham City's Mormon cooperative. When the cooperative folded, Christian in 1881, and then Willard in 1883 purchased and continued to run the dairy which was capable of producing 50,000 pounds of cheese yearly. In 1882, Hansen married a second wife, Annie Christensen (1861-1897). Both women lived in the house while Hansen served a Mormon proselytizing mission to Scandinavia (1886-1888) and during the time he was incarcerated for polygamy (1888-1889). Hansen added to his Main Street property in 1883 by purchasing part of lot 2 to the south for $220.00, and in 1884 by purchasing lot 4 to the north for $500.00. He sold part of lot 4 in 1886 for $200.00. During the time Hansen owned the property, a substantial corral and sheds were built south and east of the house (no longer extant) and a large orchard including Blue Plum, pear, peach, and apricot trees was planted as were two Thomas evergreen trees in the front yard (no longer extant). At the time Willard Hansen sold the house (19 April 1890), his family included two wives and six children. Within the next two decades he became internationally known for a variety of polled Rambouillet sheep he bred. Hansen served two terms as a state representative and one term as a state senator for Utah. He was a founder of Logan First National Bank in 1892, founder and president of the Bear River Valley Mutual Fire insurance Company in 1908, founder and first president of the Ukon Water Company in 1919, and on the board of trustees of the Utah State Agricultural College from 1919-1923. At the time of his death, Hansen left 18 living children and a widow, Caroline Funk Hansen. Three wives and two children preceding him in death.<sup>5</sup>

On 19 April 1890, Hansen sold the house to Emma Frances Levens Crawford for $3600.00. Emma (1835-1920) and her husband John Crawford (1832-1911) had been residents of nearby Ogden, Utah since the 1860s, and moved to Brigham City after most of their eight children were married. Emma and John Crawford made no significant changes to the house. After a crippling fall in 1916, Emma transferred ownership of the home to relatives, but lived there until her death in 1920. On 8 February 1923, Emma's stepdaughter Ann ("Annie") Gibb Crawford Jensen (b. 1865) took ownership of the property. One year before, 57 year-old Annie had married for the first time, to widower Denmark Jensen (1853-1937). Jensen was highly esteemed in the community, even serving the city's Mormon congregation as a Patriarch. Unfortunately, he did not have an appreciation for the aging Gothic Revival gem his wife had inherited. He soon initiated a major remodeling project which began with the removal of the original front porch and most of the gothic gingerbread, replacing the original porch with a larger one built on a poured concrete pad. He reused the original columns in the new porch, but encased them in pine planking. Jensen then added interior walls and a stairway which split the single family dwelling into two equal units, enabling him to live in one half and rent the other. He removed two small earlier additions at the rear of the structure and replaced them with a larger addition in orange-yellow brick which contained two kitchens and two bathrooms. Finally, he had matching screened porches built at each side of the rear addition, and in the same wooden siding, built a small single-car garage northwest of the house. Despite these alterations and additions, the original double cross-wing structure remained intact.<sup>6</sup>

The Thompson/Hansen House fell on hard times in the 1930s and was sold by Box Elder County four times between 1934 and 1940 for back taxes. After a short stint of ownership by Glen L. Anderson from 1939-1942, the old residence was purchased on 19 November 1942 by Henry Bott.<sup>7</sup> By the 1970s, the house had lost its few remaining gothic finials, and the original wooden windows had been replaced by non-sympathetic aluminum sash. The early 1980s saw the house entirely vacated and left to the mercies of weather and vandalism. Even the yard which had before been proudly tended, was merely plowed once a year by a local farmer to keep the weeds in check. Before Henry Bott died, he tried unsuccessfully to sell the old structure, then gave it as a donation to the Mormon Church.

In 1993, the derelict residence was rescued by Carolyn "Mitzi" Hansen Brady, a direct descendant of early owners Willard and Annie Hansen. She purchased the sad structure from the Church, motivated only by the desire to protect the house from potential demolition and to see that it was restored properly. In 1994, a complete restoration of the structure (based on historical research and 19th century photographs) was undertaken. The later porch was documented, then removed. A new porch, built in the original style and using the original chamfered posts, was erected. A master carpenter in his 80s replicated and installed the missing gothic revival turnings and bargeboards. Because the single-car garage had been heavily altered to accommodate larger vehicles, it was documented and then disassembled. Siding salvaged from the garage was used to repair damage to the screened porches of the house. New windows were milled to replicate the missing originals and were installed without damaging the still-intact windows casings. After new electrical and mechanical systems were added, the interior of the house was restored, with extra care exerted in retaining and repairing the original fabric.

The Thompson/Hansen House is once again as it once was, an architectural showpiece in a "city of homes," a witness to much history, and a monument to the skill and vision of its builders.
