The William Carlos Williams House is an irregularly shaped, two-story wooden structure with gable roof. The siding is clapboard with sections of shingle and a band of vertical boards. On the front, or northwest elevation, the main section has two bays. The more northeastern of these bays projects slightly under a gable roof. On the first floor this projection forms a bay window. A lunette is set in the gable end of this section, and a rectangular window is set on the same level in the southwestern bay, which has double windows on the first and second floors. Northwest of the main section is a multiform wing consisting of four overlapping sections, of which two have gable roofs and two have hipped roofs. The entrance to the house is through a porch recessed in the wing at the point at which it joins the main section. South of the house is a double garage. 🖊

The entrance leads into a hall with a stairway at the northeastern side. On the wall of the stair well is a mural of New York City by Ivan Earl, and on the southeastern wall of the hall hangs a painting by Ben Shawa representing his impression of Dr. Willaims' poem Patterson. South of the hall is the L-shaped living room, which has a brick fireplace with a wooden mantel shelf, flanked by bookshelves. This room contains several pictures, including a notable example of the work of Charles Demuth entitled "Coatesville, Pennsylvania: End of the Parade." The dining room, at the south corner of the house, projects slightly to the southeast.

On the second floor there are four bedrooms grouped around a center hall. The one in the southeast corner served as Dr. Williams' study, where he wrote some of his later poetry, especially after his retirement from medical practice in 1951. The furniture in this room as in the whole of the residence area of the house, is generally unchanged unchanged since the poet's death.

The remainder of the house served as Dr, Williams' medical offices. and is now used for the same purpose by his son. This part of the house has been considerably altered.

Milliam Carlos Williams, physician, novelist, and poet, has been ranked with such literary figures as: Frost, Stevens, Pound, and even T.S. Eliot. He was most noted for his verse, which evolved during his career, but was distinguished throughout by the immediacy of its descriptive brillance. Thomas Whitaker in his book William Carlos Williams writes: "The writing of William Carlos Williams is one of the major achievements in 20th-century American literature."

The house at Nine Ridge Road was Willaims' home from 1913 to 1963 when he died. Although the medical offices have been altered, the residential part of the house has been little changed. It is the home of Williams' widow at present, and is filled with furniture and objects associated with the poet.

William Carlos Williams was born in Rutherford, New Jersey, on September 17, 1883. He attended public schools there until 1896, when he spent a year in Europe attending preparatory school in Geneva. After finishing high school in New York City, he entered the University of Pennsylvania Medical School, graduating in 1906.

He interned in New York, did pediatrics graduate work in Germany, and in 1910 began practicing in his home town, Rutherford. He remained there until his death in 1963, writing and practicing medicine, although he made several trips to Europe where he met literary lights of the day and was inspired by them. In his Autobiography he says, "Because Flossie, my wife, and I have never moved, Nine Ridge Road has become a landmark for many friends who, though they have seldom or never visited us, have at least known where we lived."

Williams most famous work, Pictures from Breughel, won the Pulitzer Prize in 1963.

His other works include: Poems(1909), The Temper(1913), The Great American Novel(1923), "Kora in Hell"(1920), "Sour Grapes"(1921), In the American Grain(1925), Autobiography(1951), and Paterson (unfinished, 1946-1963).
