Summary Paragraph

The Spencer Presbyterian Church, locally known as the Market Street Chapel, is located in downtown Spencer, Roane County. Built in 1903, the church sits at an elevation of approximately ten feet above Market Street, which runs through the town of Spencer. With poured concrete steps leading to the entrance, the church is a fine example of Late Victorian Gothic architecture in Spencer, with Gothic pointed arch windows, pristine stained glass windows, and a 40-foot bell tower.

Narrative Description

Located in the commercial and residential area of downtown Spencer, the Spencer Presbyterian Church is a significant local example of Late Victorian Gothic Revival style. The church, which sits approximately ten feet above street level, is of brick construction and a poured concrete sidewalk outlines the church's perimeter. The front gabled façade (south elevation) of the building protrudes slightly towards Market Street. To the east of the front façade is a 40-foot steeple, which houses the double-door entrance of the church at its base, as well as the church's bell; the steeple is topped with a cross. The windows on the front façade, as well as the entry door, are designed in the Gothic pointed arch style. The transom of the door is filled with stained glass, giving the name of the church and its construction date: 1903. Inlaid on the replacement mahogany front doors are stained glass windows featuring white doves. On the projecting front façade, as well as the steeple, there are minor pointed arch windows that feature stained glass: on the left side of the façade (southwest elevation), and the right side of the steeple (southeast elevation).

On both front gabled side elevations of the church (east and west elevations), there are three stained glass Gothic pointed arch windows, with the center window being the most prominent. All of the stained glass in the church contains religious imagery, with the main, three-paneled windows on either side façade dedicated to congregants and prominent members of the church. The rear façade (north elevation), which is detached from the modern education building built in the 1950s, has a rear entrance on either side. There are two Gothic arch windows present on both sides of the protruding bay that surrounds the altar internally. In the center of the rear elevation, there is an ocular window frame; however, the window is no longer present, but efforts are being made to restore it. The asphalt, fishscale shingle roof of the church is a replacement, which was completed a couple of years ago during its restoration.

The 1950's education building, which was previously attached to the rear of the church, has not been used in nearly three decades, and many of the building's elements have been removed. The building is of concrete block construction and does not have a roof; the supporting steel beams are exposed. The windows of the education building have had their panes either removed or broken. The floor is poured concrete, which had been covered in vinyl tile during its use.

The church foyer, which also houses the bell tower, has had its floor replaced with a modern slate tile. To the left of the foyer, a hallway runs the remaining width of the church, with a massive, three-paned Gothic pointed arch window on the left. At the end of the hallway, there are remnants of a brick fireplace and mantle. The hallway, at one time, was separated from the main sanctuary by a folding partition, which has been removed to open-up the floor plan, but does not affect the building's integrity. Fragments of the original walnut-stained, oak wainscoting can still be seen in certain areas, and restoration work is being undertaken to recreate the paneling. The ceiling of the church runs parallel with the roof line, just dropped slightly. The original walnut-stained tongue and groove panels are still present in the church, aiding the church sanctuary's acoustics. The concrete floor of the church has been covered with modern gray carpet. There are three windows missing in the church: the coin window above the alter mentioned previously, one to the left of the alter, and one above the backdoor, but restoration work is being completed in order to fashion windows that are sympathetic to the church's style. All of the remaining stained glass windows are original to the church.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Spencer Presbyterian Church is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C: Architecture, as a fine local example of the Late Victorian Gothic style. The church also meets Criterion Consideration A: Religious Properties, as its significance is directly related to its architecture. The church was built in 1903, which coincides with its period of significance. In an area in which many churches were of wood frame construction and covered in weatherboard or other wood and vinyl siding, the Spencer Presbyterian Church was the area's first example of high-style Victorian Gothic architecture.

HISTORY

The Spencer Presbyterian Church, by the earliest known records, was formed on September 22, 1874.¹ The church was organized by a visiting preacher.² While Presbyterianism may have existed in Roane County prior to that time, little is known about its activities in the region. In the early 19th century, Presbyterians traveled throughout Roane County and established Sunday Schools, but there was still not a unifying, central house of worship in the county. Before the advent of the Spencer Presbyterian Church, there was a small Presbyterian Church established on County Route 36 in Roxalana, but its use was short-lived.

When the founding families of the Spencer Presbyterian Church—the Adams, Baileys, Gibsons, Smiths, Stones, and Walkers—met in 1874, the first item on their agenda was the construction of a church so that Presbyterians in the area could worship together as a community. The new church was a white frame structure, built on the same Market Street lot where the current church presently sits. The deed to the church was executed by Mr. and Mrs. Clay C. Smith and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin D. Williams. The deed to the lot and the original building was given to the elected Trustees of the Church—Mr. H.F. Gibson, Dr. John B. Thompson, Dr. A.G. Bailey, Mr. A.B. Wells, and Mr. Clay Smith. In 1901, three more men were elected to the board of trustees: Mr. J.B. Casto, Mr. A.S. Heck, and Mr. G.P. Stone.³ A.S. Heck refers to Albert S. Heck, a prominent oil producer in the area, whose Neoclassical home in Spencer was listed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1999.⁴

From the date of its formation until 1930, the Spencer Presbyterian Church was affiliated with the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, or the Northern Presbyterian branch of Presbyterianism. Until 1930, Roane County was included in the bounds of the Petersburg Presbytery, and many of the church founders came from Ohio, Pennsylvania, and other northern states, effectively bringing Presbyterianism to a region that had been Methodist and Baptist predominately.⁵ For unknown reasons, the Spencer Presbyterian Church was dissolved in 1930, but the church reopened in 1952. Shortly after being organized into a Southern Presbyterian Church in 1954, the congregation endeavored to add to the culture and education of community, thus building an educational building addition to the back of the church.⁶

In 1971, after the cave-in of the back wall, the congregation built a new church outside of town on County Route 14 North, which opened in 1975. The building was then used as the Early Childhood Education Center for thirteen years, serving over 225 preschoolers in two shifts.⁷ In September 1989, the building began to house the Building Blocks Child Development Center. Abandoned in the 1990s, the building was left vacant for an extended period of time, slated for demolition, and eventually purchased by its current owners, who plan to restore the property, giving the community a multi-purpose facility.

SIGNIFICANCE

The church's congregation first worshipped in the present brick building on November 29, 1903.⁸ The church's brick exterior made it very different from any other houses of worship in the area during that time period. While many churches in the county used a wooden frame structure with weatherboard, clapboard, and later aluminum/vinyl siding, the Spencer Presbyterian Church's prominent members built a locally beautiful church, using brick and incorporating high-style elements of Gothic architecture, making the building unique in Spencer.

The church is a significant local example of Late Victorian Gothic architecture with massive Gothic pointed arch windows throughout. As the Gothic Revival movement influenced American architecture in the late 19th and early 20th century, congregations began to build churches more aligned with English medieval architecture, seeing it as "the most proper" style.⁹ Most Victorian-style buildings are defined by their asymmetrical facades and steeply pitched roofs.¹⁰ In addition to its other Gothic elements, the Spencer

Presbyterian Church features a cross-topped steeple, which is a common element in the Late Victorian Gothic style.¹¹

The WV SHPO has nine other Roane County churches documented. Churches, such as the Amma Methodist Church (RO-0006-0001), the Pleasant Hills Church (RO-0009-0002), the Wallback United Methodist Church (RO-0009-0003), and the Rolling Hills Church (RO-0011) are wood frame Folk Victorian design, covered in weatherboard and/or clapboard.¹² The Newton Baptist Church (RO-0010-0001), the Boggs Fork Church (RO-0019), and the Mount Welcome Union Church (RO-0025) are also wood frame Folk Victorian buildings, clad in aluminum or vinyl siding. The First Baptist Church (RO-0005-0075) is a modern brick structure built in the 1950s, while the Newton United Methodist Church (RO-0010-0006) has a stucco and weatherboard exterior, following the same design as the other Folk Victorian churches in the area. Differing from the other Roane County churches documented, the Spencer Presbyterian Church embodies more high-style design elements of Gothic architecture, most notably its stained glass windows.

In the same area of Spencer, there are two other churches, both Gothic style with crenelated towers defining the front facade. The St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church on Church Street was founded near the end of the Civil War and a small church was built where the current building stands; the present brick structure was completed in 1915.¹³ Like the Spencer Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church features Gothic elements, such as its arches and stained glass windows. The Memorial Methodist Protestant Church, approximately five hundred feet southwest of the Spencer Presbyterian Church, also features Gothic elements with its arches and stained glass windows. The Methodist Protestant Church first housed its congregation in a small church house in 1892, but the current building was completed in 1927.¹⁴ Given that both of the Methodist churches in Spencer were completed after 1903, not only is the Spencer Presbyterian Church architecturally significant to the area, but it is also the oldest church in Spencer.

The stained glass windows in the Spencer Presbyterian Church give the building its significant elements. Once slated for auction, because of the church's impending demolition, the majority of the church's original stained glass was recovered, with a local artist providing restoration work and sympathetic matches for those windows that were not found. Unlike the other stained glass in nearby St. John's Methodist and Memorial Methodist, the windows in the Spencer Presbyterian Church are filled with symbolic imagery, giving a more intimate and personal feeling than the geometric patterns of the other two. It is the artistic renditions and craftsmanship of the Spencer Presbyterian Church's stained glass windows that most distinguishes it from its surrounding churches.

SUMMARY

The Spencer Presbyterian Church is an excellent example of Victorian Gothic architecture in an area in which most rural churches can be categorized by their wood frame construction and clad in weatherboard or synthetic siding. The church's stained glass windows, which are a unique work of art in the area, give the building its most defining character. Because it derives its primary significance from its architecture, the Spencer Presbyterian Church is eligible listing for on the National Register under Criterion C: Architecture, and under Criteria Consideration A: Religious Properties.
