Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The building is a 1½ story barn constructed of 2½' thick adobe walls on a rock foundation. The simple building has a medium gable roof of redwood shingles. The historic setting has been lost through subdivision and new construction; the building is immediately adjacent to a small shopping complex, and is partially surrounded by parking. The barn was in a deteriorated condition until restored to its historic appearance in 1984.

The Kottinger barn is one of the last known examples of its type in the state. This simple, utilitarian structure is constructed of locally made adobe bricks placed on a 4½' stone foundation; the walls are 2½' thick and are plastered on the exterior. The roof is a medium gable covered with redwood shingles. Exterior dimensions of the barn are approximately 35' x 35'.

The building faces east. This principal elevation is symmetrical with a broad central doorway flanked by two windows. Adobe bricks were arranged to create arches over the windows and doorways (visible in the photos taken prior to restoration); these were covered over when the plaster was restored. The original 4" x 8" redwood headers are imbedded in the adobe over the doors and windows. The windows have redwood shutters and still contain the original iron bars. Three metal plates with S-shaped braces are visible on the facade near the eaves; these anchor tie rods which interlock in the center, tying the building together. The original double doors of the entrance have been restored, serving as shutters over the new single main door. The west (rear) elevation is virtually identical in appearance; the central doorway opens onto a patio paved with rock from the nearby creek.

The north and south end walls are plain in appearance. The upper portion of the walls enclosed by the gable is covered with vertical boarding, with a centrally placed loft doorway on each end. The north wall contains no additional detailing except a metal tie rod plate. The south wall had deteriorated over the years and was replaced with vertical board and batten sheathing many years ago; this wooden wall had also deteriorated severely. This wall has now been rebuilt and plastered to restore its historic appearance; a new window, similar in appearance to the other original windows was added at this time.

The interior is one large room with an upper story loft. The posts are mortised into the beams. Ceiling joists are 3" x 8" rough cut; roof rafters are spaced 32" apart.

The building was severely deteriorated when purchased by the present owners. Sections of the adobe had crumbled, and large areas of plaster were gone. Fortunately, most of the original architectural elements and hardware still remained. The building has been totally renovated for use as a wine tasting room. Special care was taken to restore the appearance as closely to the original as possible. The building is now the focal point of a small shopping complex near Pleasanton's historic downtown.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Kottinger Barn, built about 1852, is all that remains of the original Kottinger property, once owned by John W. Kottinger, one of the founders of Pleasanton. It is one of few adobe barns in California and one of only three adobe structures in the Pleasanton area. During the 1850s and 60s, Kottinger's house and barn served as the center for Alameda county government in Murray Township. In the absence of public buildings, Kottinger held court in his home and jailed prisoners in a section of his adobe barn. The barn was apparently used for more conventional purposes as well, as part of Kottinger's stock raising operations.

Kottinger was a native of Austria, born in 1820. In 1846 he came to the United States, arriving finally in California in 1849. Kottinger earned his living in the cattle business, and as an interpreter and school teacher in Santa Clara County before he was admitted to the practice of law in 1851. Shortly thereafter he took up residence in what was to become Pleasanton, then called Alisal after the many sycamore trees in the area. He had been married in 1850 to Maria Refugia Agosta Bernal, the daughter of Juan Pablo Bernal, one of the original grantees of the Rancho El Valle de San Jose. In 1852 he built an adobe and frame residence on the south bank of Arroyo Valle near the home of his wife's family. Shortly afterwards he built the adobe barn. Although the barn remains, the house was torn down in 1930.

Not long after Alameda County was formed in 1853, the first elections for the township were held in Kottinger's house. Kottinger was elected Constable, and used the house and barn in the performance of his judicial duties as courthouse and jail respectively. (To transfer prisoners from the court to the jail, Kottinger constructed a tunnel between the two buildings, thus avoiding hostile crowds.)

Kottinger was known for his judicial activities as both Constable and Justice of the Peace, and as the individual who opened the first store in the Pleasanton area. He was one of the town's founding settlers. His barn, which was used in the course of his duties, is the only structure associated with him that remains today. It was one of the town's first public buildings, and is an uncommon non-residential adobe building. It is the only remaining adobe within the city limits of Pleasanton, and one of only three remaining adobes in the area. Of the three, the Kottinger building retains the highest level of integrity.
