Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Plymouth Village Historic District is the heart of the Pilgrims' original settlement, located on a plateau overlooking Plymouth Harbor. The district includes Winslow Street, North Street, Middle Street (partial), Carver Street, and Leyden Street-- a small area conveniently located between the harbor on the east and the civic and commercial district on the west. Approximately 60 structures stand in this area.

Plymouth Village was established as a residential neighborhood, the first houses being constructed on Leyden Street, then expanding to North Street. The first, 17th century houses were replaced with larger, more permanent structures during the Georgian, Federal, and Greek Revival periods. Little construction occurred here in the late 19th and 20th centuries. The area remained solely residential until about the 1920s, when apartments and small shops and offices began to appear within the existing structures, especially on Leyden Street. Today the area presents a charming series of streetscapes still residential in character.

The Plymouth Village Historic District is a densely built neighborhood, but the compactness and small scale of the structures give it a very comfortable character. The buildings here are typically 2½ stories, wood frame, with gable roofs and broad facades set directly on the street. Stylistically, the district is characterized by sturdy Georgian designs, a delicate and often awkward Federal style, and a well-developed and refined Greek Revival period, best distinguished by its elegant porticos. Although artificial siding is beginning to creep north from Leyden Street, buildings in this neighborhood are generally well preserved, and intrusions are minimal. The area contains two major open spaces: Brewster Park at the mouth of Town Brook (at the southern boundary of the district), and Coles Hill, an escarpment rising from the waterfront to the west and extending from Leyden to North Streets.

Georgian and Federal dwellings in this district are generally modest in aspiration and execution. 27 Leyden Street (ca. 1790), a very typical design in this neighborhood, is a vernacular half-house, with a handsome classical doorway offset on its three bay facade (Map # 4). 33-35 Leyden Street (1794-96), facing east towards the harbor, is a more substantial Georgian house, with a gambrel roof, twin end chimneys, and a clapboard facade with brick ends (Photo #1; Map #2).

29 Leyden Street (ca. 1834) is a typical design from the Federal period. The low hip roof and center chimney are common vernacular motifs, but the asymmetrical three bay facade and the arched and recessed entrance are distinctive features of this neighborhood (Map # 5). Across the road at 1 Carver Street (1832), the same doorway motif is repeated, now on a larger and symmetrical five bay facade (Map #12). The hip roof original to this building was soon replaced by a newly fashionable gable roof with corner pilasters, indicating the easy transition between the Federal and Greek Revival styles in the area.

Architectural development in the Plymouth Village Historic District peaked in the Greek Revival period, and is well represented in both transitional and pure stylistic designs. 8-14 North Street is one of the most interesting examples of stylistic layering in the district. The structure consists of four connected buildings combining Georgian and Greek Revival motifs. The variety in building height and shapes is unified by the rhythm of door and window openings and by harmonious detailing (Photo #3; Map #38-41). 26 North Street (1775) is a loose combination of stylistic motifs. Uncommon in its use of brick as a building material, the house has a steep hip roof, graceful segmental arched windows, and an elegant Doric portico (Photo #4; Map #52). 35 North Street (1829) is a most interesting a more elegant transitional design, with the hip roof, fanlight doorway, and five bay facade of the Federal period, but with an entablature, corner pilasters, and strong Ionic portico from the Greek Revival (Photo #5; Map #51).

20 North Street (ca. 1840) is a good example of the pure Greek Revival design in this area. The $2\frac{1}{2}$ story frame building has its pedimented gable end to the street, highlighted by a small but sturdy Doric portico (Photo #4; Map #49). 29-31 North Street (ca. 1830) is a more academically influenced Greek Revival house, unusually sophisticated for its time and place. The peculiar duplex design features a gable parallel to the street, a shallow central pavilion, rustication on the first floor, flushboarding on the second floor, and a heavy frame of entablature and corner pilasters (Photo #5; Map #50).

The stylistic revivals of the late 19th and early 20th centuries are represented in three major buildings in the district. The old Baptist Church, now the Salvation Army Building (1913), at the corner of Carver and Middle Streets, is a modest interpretation of high Victorian Gothic. The small, narrow building has a fieldstone facade on a granite base, the other elevations being built of brick. A crenellated tower, parapet, round-arched windows with Gothic tracery, and a lancet-arched doorway are the most notable features of the building (Map #19A). The Winslow House (1754, alterations ca. 1898) on North and Winslow Street is the district's most outstanding architectural design. In contrast to the small urban dwellings which characterize the area, this large 2-story building has a hip roof with a monitor and cupola, roof balustrades, and a large columned veranda with pedimented entry (Photo #6; Map #53). The Classical Revival style Plymouth Public Library (1901) on North Street is the district's best example of 20th century design, although it, too, is quite modest in concept. The horizontal, 1-story building is constructed of brick, articulated by brick pilasters and a pedimented portico with paired Ionic columns (Map #33).

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Hymouth Village Historic District comprises the major portion of the first townscape to be established as a permanent English settlement in the United States. Streets in this district were laid out as early as 1621 and form the major visual evidence of the early period of Hymouth's history. Although none of the first structures survive, the continued vitality of this neighborhood through the mid-19th century is indicated by its high quality residential architecture, several churches and parsonages, and its many distinguished residents. Thus the district meets criteria A, B, and C of the National Register. The area is also recognized as a local historic district.

The area around Town Brook has always been an important feature of Plymouth, being one of the reasons why the Pilgrims chose this site for their settlement. The mouth of the brook offered a good harbor for their shallop and even for small vessels, though it was too shallow for the Mayflower. The springs which fed the brook offered a supply of good water (which the Pilgrims had sought in vain in their explorations on Cape Cod), as well as a valuable supply of alewives, used as fertilizer for crops. At the top of Coles Hill, now Carver Street, the Pilgrims buried their dead during the first winter. In the spring the area was levelled off and planted in corn to conceal from the Indians the number of the colony that had died. The site is marked by a granite sarcophagus memorializing these settlers and by a bronze statue of Massasoit, both placed here in 1920. Coles Hill was designated a National Historic Landmark in 1962 (Map #19).

The small scale, urban character of the district was consciously built into its development. Leyden Street (1621), North Street (1633), and Middle Street (1725) were plotted into house lots immediately upon being laid out. Although only the street pattern remains from this early period, the first colonists lived in this area-- among the names being Bradford, Brewster, Winslow, Warren, Alden, Standish, and Fuller. Later residents of the 18th and 19th centuries are less familiar to the national public, but their contribution to the steady development of the town-- in religion, commerce, and civic affairs-- were equally substantial.

The various streets in the district are visually cohesive, but historically tend to have certain peculiar characteristics. Leyden Street's communication both with Town Square and its two churches and with the harbor is reflected in many of its residents. 29 Leyden Street was built about 1834 by Capt. Samuel D. Holmes, master of the sloop "Harriet," a Plymouth to Boston packet (Map #3). 17, 18, and 21 Leyden Street were occupied by pastors of the First Church at various times during the 18th and 19th centuries (Photo #2 & ; Map #7, & 6).

Carver Street also had strong religious connections. 1 Carver Street is the site of the parsonage for Plymouth's first church, built for Rev. John Cotton (Map #12). Plymouth's first Universalist church and parsonage were built here in 1826, overlooking the harbor. Only the parsonage building is now standing (Map #18), but the old Baptist Church-- built nearly a century later -- still stands testimony to the central religious function of the area (Map #18)A.

North and Winslow Streets, in contrast, are characterized by closer contacts with the civic, commercial, and cultural life of the town. The Winslow House, corner of North and Winslow Streets, was built in 1754 for Edward Winslow-- selectman, Clerk of the Courts, Registrar of Probate, Collector of the Port, and Town Treasurer (Photo # 6 ; Map #55). In the nineteenth century the house was owned by Charles Jackson, whose daughter Lydia in 1835 married Ralph Waldo Emerson in the east parlor of the house. 26 North Street was built in 1775 by Thomas Jackson, whose son-in-law John Russell was a selectman and one of the incorporators of Plymouth Cordage Company in 1824 (Photo #4; Map #52). The Russell family has occupied this house since 1804, the last three generations all having served as treasurer of the Plymouth Savings Bank. 7 North Street was occupied by another Russell, William S., between 1846 and 1863; William was author of the important local work, Guide to Plymouth and Recollections of the Pilgrims (1846). The house was built in 1838 by Ebenezer Parker, cashier at the Old Colony Bank (Map #56). 9 North Street (ca. 1832) was built by Dr. James Thacher, a surgeon in the Revolution and author of works on medicine, agriculture, and local history (Map #9).

Two houses on North Street are associated with the locally prominent Spooner family. Taylor House II, 35 North Street, was built in 1829 for Nathaniel Bourne Spooner-- son of the founder of the Plymouth Cordage Company-- who with his wife was conspicuous in the anti-slavery movement (Photo # 5; Map # 29). Deacon Ephraim Spooner, who built 27 North Street (1749), was a conspicuous patriot in the Revolutionary War, town clerk for 52 years, associate justice of the Court of Common Pleas, representative to the state legislature, and member of the Executive Council. Occupied by the Spooner family for two centuries, the Spooner House is now a museum (Photo #5, Map #32).

The architecture of this area is notable first for its overall impression as an harmonious, urban community of the 18th and 19th centuries. Rhythm, scale, and attention to detail are characteristics which immediately distinguish this district from surrounding zones of development. The careful and often original craftsmanship of the individual designs is also notable, particularly in the grander Greek Revival homes built on North Street. Jacob and Abner Taylor were the contractors for several of the houses of that period (29-31 and 35 North Street; Photo #5; Map #29 & 30-31) as well as for Alexander Parris's Pilgrim Hall on Main Street. Although middle-class and typically vernacular in character, the Plymouth Village district also contains the work of two regionally important architectural firms: Everett & Meade's Public Library (Map #35), and substantial alterations to the Winslow House (Photo #6; Map #55) by Joseph Everett Chandler, an early preservationist.

As the initial node of seventeenth century English settlement at Plymouth, the land encompassed by the Plymouth Village Historic District should be considered to contain archeological resources of great importance. Most significant among the expected archeological remains would be those of the seventeenth century. Historical archeological sites in New England of that period have generally been characterized by low density and low visibility. However, the known density of 17th century occupation in Plymouth should have increased the store of cultural information in the form of artifactual remains and features present below grade. Such archeological data, excavated and analyzed, would greatly increase the information on 17th century life which has been gathered to date through material culture studies.

Remains of 18th and 19th century industrial and domestic occupation of this area should also be considered to exist within the district and to be of potential archeological significance (see Susan G. Ferguson, "Analysis of a 19th Century Refuse Pit in Plymouth, Massachusetts." B.A. Honors Thesis: Dept. of Anthropology, Brown University, 1970). Finally, material remains of the colonial era within this landscape, which includes fresh and saltwater as well as prominent topographical features, may overlay prehistoric archeological remains from one or more earlier occupations.

Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Plymouth Village Historic District is the heart of the Pilgrims' original settlement, located on a plateau overlooking Plymouth Harbor. The district includes Winslow Street, North Street, Middle Street (partial), Carver Street, and Leyden Street— a small area conveniently located between the harbor on the east and the civic and commercial district on the west. Approximately 60 structures stand in this area.

Plymouth Village was established as a residential neighborhood, the first houses being constructed on Leyden Street, then expanding to North Street. The first, 17th century houses were replaced with larger, more permanent structures during the Georgian, Federal, and Greek Revival periods. Little construction occurred here in the late 19th and 20th centuries. The area remained solely residential until about the 1920s, when apartments and small shops and offices began to appear within the existing structures, especially on Leyden Street. Today the area presents a charming series of streetscapes, still residential in character.

The Plymouth Village Historic District is a densely built neighborhood, but the compactness and small scale of the structures give it a very comfortable character. The buildings here are typically 2½ stories, wood frame, with gable roofs and broad facades set directly on the street. Stylistically, the district is characterized by sturdy Georgian designs, a delicate and often awkward Federal style, and a well-developed and refined Greek Revival period, best distinguished by its elegant porticos. Although artificial siding is beginning to creep north from Leyden Street, buildings in this neighborhood are generally well preserved, and intrusions are minimal. The area contains two major open spaces: Brewster Park at the mouth of Town Brook (at the southern boundary of the district), and Coles Hill, an escarpment rising from the waterfront to the west and extending from Leyden to North Streets.

Georgian and Federal dwellings in this district are generally modest in aspiration and execution. 27 Leyden Street (ca. 1790), a very typical design in this neighborhood, is a vernacular half-house, with a handsome classical doorway offset on its three bay facade (Map # 4). 33-35 Leyden Street (1794-96), facing east towards the harbor, is a more substantial Georgian house, with a gambrel roof, twin end chimneys, and a clapboard facade with brick ends (Photo #1; Map #2).

29 Leyden Street (ca. 1834) is a typical design from the Federal period. The low hip roof and center chimney are common vernacular motifs, but the asymmetrical three bay facade and the arched and recessed entrance are distinctive features of this neighborhood (Map # 3). Across the road at 1 Carver Street (1832), the same doorway motif is repeated, now on a larger and symmetrical five bay facade (Map #12). The hip roof original to this building was soon replaced by a newly fashionable gable roof with corner pilasters, indicating the easy transition between the Federal and Greek Revival styles in the area.

Architectural development in the Elymouth Village Historic District peaked in the Greek Revival period, and is well represented in both transitional and pure stylistic designs. 8-14 North Street is one of the most interesting examples of stylistic layering in the district. The structure consists of four connected buildings combining Georgian and Greek Revival motifs. The variety in building height and shapes is unified by the rhythm of door and window openings and by harmonious detailing (Photo #3; Map #38-41). 26 North Street (1775) is a loose combination of stylistic motifs. Uncommon in its use of brick as a building material, the house has a steep hip roof, graceful segmental arched windows, and an elegant Doric portico (Photo #4; Map #52). 35 North Street (1829) is a most interesting a more elegant transitional design, with the hip roof, fanlight doorway, and five bay facade of the Federal period, but with an entablature, corner pilasters, and strong Ionic portico from the Greek Revival (Photo #5; Map #29).

20 North Street (ca. 1840) is a good example of the pure Greek Revival design in this area. The $2\frac{1}{2}$ story frame building has its pedimented gable end to the street, highlighted by a small but sturdy Doric portico (Photo #4; Map #49). 29-31 North Street (ca. 1830) is a more academically influenced Greek Revival house, unusually sophisticated for its time and place. The peculiar duplex design features a gable parallel to the street, a shallow central pavilion, rustication on the first floor, flushboarding on the second floor, and a heavy frame of entablature and corner pilasters (Photo #5; Map #30).

The stylistic revivals of the late 19th and early 20th centuries are represented in three major buildings in the district. The old Baptist Church, now the Salvation Army Building (1913), at the corner of Carver and Middle Streets, is a modest interpretation of high Victorian Gothic. The small, narrow building has a fieldstone facade on a granite base, the other elevations being built of brick. A crenellated tower, parapet, round-arched windows with Gothic tracery, and a lancet-arched doorway are the most notable features of the building (Map #18A). The Winslow House (1754, alterations ca. 1898) on North and Winslow Street is the district's most outstanding architectural design. In contrast to the small urban dwellings which characterize the area, this large 2-story building has a hip roof with a monitor and cupola, roof balustrades, and a large columned veranda with pedimented entry (Photo #6; Map #55). The Classical Revival style Elymouth Public Library (1901) on North Street is the district's best example of 20th century design, although it, too, is quite modest in concept. The horizontal, 1-story building is constructed of brick, articulated by brick pilasters and a pedimented portico with paired Ionic columns (Map #33).

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Hymouth Village Historic District comprises the major portion of the first townscape to be established as a permanent English settlement in the United States. Streets in this district were laid out as early as 1621 and form the major visual evidence of the early period of Hymouth's history. Although none of the first structures survive, the continued vitality of this neighborhood through the mid-19th century is indicated by its high quality residential architecture, several churches and parsonages, and its many distinguished residents. Thus the district meets criteria A, B, and C of the National Register. The area is also recognized as a local historic district.

The area around Town Brook has always been an important feature of Plymouth, being one of the reasons why the Pilgrims chose this site for their settlement. The mouth of the brook offered a good harbor for their shallop and even for small vessels, though it was too shallow for the Mayflower. The springs which fed the brook offered a supply of good water (which the Pilgrims had sought in vain in their explorations on Cape Cod), as well as a valuable supply of alewives, used as fertilizer for crops. At the top of Coles Hill, now Carver Street, the Pilgrims buried their dead during the first winter. In the spring the area was levelled off and planted in corn to conceal from the Indians the number of the colony that had died. The site is marked by a granite sarcophagus memorializing these settlers and by a bronze statue of Massasoit, both placed here in 1920. Coles Hill was designated a National Historic Landmark in 1962 (Map #19).

The small scale, urban character of the district was consciously built into its development. Leyden Street (1621), North Street (1633), and Middle Street (1725) were plotted into house lots immediately upon being laid out. Although only the street pattern remains from this early period, the first colonists lived in this area-- among the names being Bradford, Brewster, Winslow, Warren, Alden, Standish, and Fuller. Later residents of the 18th and 19th centuries are less familiar to the national public, but their contribution to the steady development of the town-- in religion, commerce, and civic affairs-- were equally substantial.

The various streets in the district are visually cohesive, but historically tend to have certain peculiar characteristics. Leyden Street's communication both with Town Square and its two churches and with the harbor is reflected in many of its residents. 29 Leyden Street was built about 1834 by Capt. Samuel D. Holmes, master of the sloop "Harriet," a Plymouth to Boston packet (Map #3). 17, 18, and 21 Leyden Street were occupied by pastors of the First Church at various times during the 18th and 19th centuries (Photo #2 & ; Map #7, 9 & 6).

Carver Street also had strong religious connections. 1 Carver Street is the site of the parsonage for Plymouth's first church, built for Rev. John Cotton (Map #12). Plymouth's first Universalist church and parsonage were built here in 1826, overlooking the harbor. Only the parsonage building is now standing (Map #18), but the old Baptist Church-- built nearly a century later -- still stands testimony to the central religious function of the area (Map #18)A.

North and Winslow Streets, in contrast, are characterized by closer contacts with the civic, commercial, and cultural life of the town. The Winslow House, corner of North and Winslow Streets, was built in 1754 for Edward Winslow-- selectman, Clerk of the Courts, Registrar of Probate, Collector of the Port, and Town Treasurer (Photo # 6; Map # 55). In the nineteenth century the house was owned by Charles Jackson, whose daughter Lydia in 1835 married Ralph Waldo Emerson in the east parlor of the house. 26 North Street was built in 1775 by Thomas Jackson, whose son-in-law John Russell was a selectman and one of the incorporators of Plymouth Cordage Company in 1824 (Photo #4; Map # 52). The Russell family has occupied this house since 1804, the last three generations all having served as treasurer of the Plymouth Savings Bank. 7 North Street was occupied by another Russell, William S., between 1846 and 1863; William was author of the important local work, Guide to Plymouth and Recollections of the Pilgrims (1846). The house was built in 1838 by Ebenezer Parker, cashier at the Old Colony Bank (Map # 36). 9 North Street (ca. 1832) was built by Dr. James Thacher, a surgeon in the Revolution and author of works on medicine, agriculture, and local history (Map # 9).

Two houses on North Street are associated with the locally prominent Spooner family. Taylor House II, 35 North Street, was built in 1829 for Nathaniel Bourne Spooner-- son of the founder of the Plymouth Cordage Company-- who with his wife was conspicuous in the anti-slavery movement (Photo # 5; Map # 29). Deacon Ephraim Spooner, who built 27 North Street (1749), was a conspicuous patriot in the Revolutionary War, town clerk for 52 years, associate justice of the Court of Common Pleas, representative to the state legislature, and member of the Executive Council. Occupied by the Spooner family for two centuries, the Spooner House is now a museum (Photo #5, Map #32).

The architecture of this area is notable first for its overall impression as an harmonious, urban community of the 18th and 19th centuries. Rhythm, scale, and attention to detail are characteristics which immediately distinguish this district from surrounding zones of development. The careful and often original craftsmanship of the individual designs is also notable, particularly in the grander Greek Revival homes built on North Street. Jacob and Abner Taylor were the contractors for several of the houses of that period (29-31 and 35 North Street; Photo #5; Map # 29 & 30-31) as well as for Alexander Parris's Pilgrim Hall on Main Street. Although middle-class and typically vernacular in character, the Plymouth Village district also contains the work of two regionally important architectural firms: Everett & Meade's Public Library (Map # 33), and substantial alterations to the Winslow House (Photo #6; Map # 55) by Joseph Everett Chandler, an early preservationist.

archeological remains would be those of the seventeenth century. Historical archeological sites in New England of that period have generally been characterized by low density and low visibility. However, the known density of 17th century occupation in Plymouth should have increased the store of cultural information in the form of artifactual remains and features present below grade. Such archeological data, excavated and analyzed, would greatly increase the information on 17th century life which has been gathered to date through material culture studies.

Remains of 18th and 19th century industrial and domestic occupation of this area should also be considered to exist within the district and to be of potential archeological significance (see Susan G. Ferguson, "Analysis of a 19th Century Refuse Pit in Plymouth, Massachusetts." B.A. Honors Thesis: Dept. of Anthropology, Brown University, 1970). Finally, material remains of the colonial era within this landscape, which includes fresh and saltwater as well as prominent topographical features, may overlay prehistoric archeological remains from one or more earlier occupations.
