Narrative Description

The Samuel M. Lane House is located at 1776 8th Avenue, Marion, Linn County, Iowa. The house faces south fronting 8th Avenue, which was the fashionable and wealthy neighborhood in Marion in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. This neighborhood was known locally as "Pucker Street," reportedly for the superior attitude of some of its upper class residents. The Pucker Street Historic District, of which the Lane House is a contributing building, is also being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places. In addition to the house, the Lane property includes a small, one-stall frame garage built in the early twentieth century and a three-stall brick garage added to the property in 1992. Of the secondary buildings, the early twentieth century garage is considered contributing, with the more modern garage considered non-contributing, although it is certainly built in a sympathetic design and is hidden from public view other than from the rear of the lot.

The property is an odd-shaped lot having something of an L-shape formed by the addition of a full rear lot to this property in the twentieth century so that it would reach from 8th to 9th avenues. The property shares a driveway with the adjacent property, with an additional half-circle drive in the front yard. The older garage has a driveway leading north to 9th Avenue, while the garage built in 1992 is accessed via the common driveway with the neighboring property leading out to 8th Avenue.

The house is a two-story Italianate-styled home built of locally manufactured brick. It has a low-pitched hip roof, covered with asphalt shingles, and a limestone foundation. Features of note include the shaped stone lintels on the windows, the tall, narrow windows on the ground floor of the front façade that originally reached to the porch floor, the wide eave overhang, the wide friezeboard, and the wood shutters. The overhang originally had brackets that may have been removed in the 1930s. The one-time presence of the brackets was confirmed by an old postcard photograph of the house showing eight brackets across the front but not around the sides. The windows include two-over-two double-hungs and one cottage window with a leaded glass header. There is a two-story rear ell that was a one-story summer kitchen originally but was enlarged to its present form by the early twentieth century. Also attached to the rear was the original brick carriage house, which was first remodeled into an early automobile garage and more recently into a den. The bar in this den was the original brick-lined privy, the vault of which is still present underneath the floor.

In the early twentieth century, the original front porch, which was a full-length, flat-roofed open porch that had square (probably chamfered) posts, was replaced with a large wrap-around porch that features very ornate paired posts that are carved with an elaborate braided-rope type of pattern. The paired posts rest on brick piers. In the 1930s, the original double front doors were replaced with a single door flanked by three-light sidelights. The front windows appear to have been reduced at the same time. Above the front door is the original three-light transom, with a curved two-light transom above that. A more modern modification was the enclosure of the wrapped-around portion of the front porch to form a sunroom; however, the entire front of the porch remains open.

The interior retains many original components and features of note including the curving walnut staircase baluster, original woodwork (door and window surrounds and mopboards) and flooring, and the curved walls in the hallway on both the first and second floors. The fireplace in the front room came from the old Daniel's hotel and was added by the current owners. It has an oak mantelpiece with glazed tile around the firebox, and a mirror over the mantel.

While there have been some modifications through the years, most notably the replacement of the original porch, the most significant of these modifications occurred before 1940 and represent important components of the building's historical and architectural evolution. The distinctive front porch is considered a contributing rather than a detracting component of this building. Overall, the Lane House retains good integrity and is being nominated to the National Register to recognize the importance of this building to the Pucker Street Historic District and as a well-preserved Italianate brick house in the City of Marion. The current owners, Donald and Llewellyn Balster, are very interested in maintaining the historic look of this home and preserving it for future generations.

The Samuel M. Lane House is considered locally significant under Criterion C as a good representation of the early brick Italianate-style homes built along 8th Avenue in the Pucker Street Historic District in the late 1860s. This home and its history reflect the social and architectural history of this neighborhood, which was populated by Marion's wealthy and influential citizens in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and whose stylish homes line 8th and 9th avenues within this District. The Lane House is a landmark along 8th Avenue. The significant date for this property is the year that it was built, 1868.

Historical Background

Samuel M. Lane purchased Block 3, on part of which this house now sits, in May 1868 from James K. Hervey for the total price of $900 [Hervey had earlier purchased this block for $800 in 1866, so the $100 increase was a small profit]. The following May of 1869, Lane sold this property to George S. Lawrence for the sum of $7000—the tremendous increase in price strongly suggesting that the house had been built in the meantime. While Lane did not retain this property for long, it does appear that he had the house built; therefore, the historic name of the property refers to this association. Not much is known of Lane, although he was the School Board President in Marion in 1869, a position that would indicate that he was respected and of some influence in the community (Hull 1998:28-30). Unfortunately, he was not listed in either the 1860 or 1870 U.S. Population Censuses for Marion, so his tenure in the community must have been short. It is known that the house was standing by 1868 because it was represented on a panoramic illustration of Marion along 8th Avenue (see Page 8). It is also similar in style to several other brick houses built along 8th Avenue in the late 1860s including the Hubbard House (1525 8th Avenue; built in 1861), the Latham House (1580 8th Avenue; built in 1866), the Cobban House (1425 8th Avenue; built in 1866), and the Cardell House (1649 8th Avenue; also built in 1866).

George Lawrence, and his wife Sarah, owned this house from 1869 until 1877 when it was sold to Thomas C. Ovington. Unfortunately, little is known of George Lawrence and, interestingly, while he was listed in the 1870 U.S. Population Census for Marion, he was listed as “without” an occupation. George Lawrence, a native of New York, died in 1876, and his widow, Sarah, was residing in New York when the house was sold to Ovington in February 1877. Thomas C. Ovington was the son of Thomas S. Ovington, who owned a successful mercantile in Marion. Thomas C. was in partnership with his father in this business, which was then known as the T.S. Ovington and Son Mercantile. Thomas C. did not live long in this house, passing away in May 1879. His widow, Josie Walton Ovington, sold this property to Edgar N. Lessee on October 1881. The Lessee family owned this house for about ten years, but little is known of Edgar Lessee. On August 24, 1891, the property was sold to Sabria Rathbun Caldwell, who was married to Dr. J.W. Caldwell, who had been a Marion dentist since the early 1880s. Mrs. Caldwell had been a teacher in Marion in the 1880s prior to her marriage. Her brother, Samuel W. Rathbun, was the longtime editor of the Marion Register. Sabria Caldwell died in 1915, followed by Dr. Caldwell in 1918. They had no children; however, the Caldwells were no longer living at the house prior to their deaths. It had been sold in 1902 to J.C. and S.J. Wallace, who retained possession until December 1913, when it was sold to Dora M. Lillie, who along with her husband, Clinton D. Lillie, owned this house until 1930 when it was sold to Andrew P. and Sara Elizabeth Munsen.

Andrew Munsen was a building contractor, and upon purchase of the Lane House, he set about modernizing the house, including updating the plumbing and heating systems. He also made some structural changes taking out fireplaces (although the chimneys remain) and removing some exterior trim, shortening the front windows and replacing the front door. The current owners put back a fireplace in the downstairs front parlor using a historic piece salvaged from the old Daniel's Hotel.

The Munsens owned this house for 19 years, renting it to a number of families. Then in November 1949, the house was sold to Thomas J. and Betty M. Davis. It was the Davises who screened in part of the large porch. In February 1957, the Davises sold the house to Ralph and Martha Young. Mr. Young, had for a time been in charge of the Sentinel. The Youngs did not retain ownership long, selling the house in August of that same year to Eloise Engel and her nephew Richard Straley. Eloise Engel had been a ballet dancer but was in a wheelchair during her occupation of this house. In 1958, Richard Straley quitclaimed his interest in the property to Eloise Engel, with Mrs. Engel selling the property in June 1959 to realtor Alma A. Henderson, who resold it the following month to the current owners, Donald and Llewellyn Balster. The Balsters added the fireplace from the Daniel's Hotel and enclosed the screened-in section of the front porch. They also added the brick garage in 1992 and remodeled the former carriage house/garage attached to the rear of the house into a den.

Architectural Significance

While there were no long periods of historical association with any one individual, the Lane House is considered a good example of the prosperous and stylish homes that were built by Marion's leading businessmen and professionals along 8th Avenue in the late nineteenth century. It is a particularly good example of the Italianate-styled brick homes built in this neighborhood in the late 1860s. There are four other such homes within the Pucker Street Historic District along 8th Avenue including the Hubbard House at 1525 8th Avenue built in 1861, the Cobban House at 1425 8th Avenue built in 1866, the Judge Latham House at 1580 8th Avenue built in 1866, and the Cardell House at 1649 8th Avenue built in 1866. The Lane House built in 1868 at 1776 8th Avenue reflects the end of this mini-building boom along 8th Avenue in the late 1860s. In fact, there would be no new houses built in this neighborhood until the 1880s, with most of those later houses reflecting the then-popular Queen Anne style of architecture. The Lane House is also notable architecturally for its use of locally manufactured brick, which appears to be an important property type in the City of Marion as a whole reflecting an important early pioneer industry.

The Italianate style of architecture was popular nationally between 1840 and 1885, with one of the principal subtypes of this style being the simple hip-roofed square or rectangular two-story that often had a cupola at the roof apex. Between 1850-1880, this style was particularly popular "in the expanding towns and cities of the Midwest," with the examples present in the Pucker Street Historic District reflecting this popularity in the growing community of Marion (McAlester and McAlester 1998:212). While the examples in Marion would not necessarily be considered high style or elaborately styled examples of the Italianate, they do represent stylish homes meant to impress and of the latest fashion. That so many were built along 8th Avenue in the 1860s, demonstrates the development of this neighborhood during this period as the place to "view the town's fashion leaders" (Oxley 1995:150) and as "the most desirable street for the wealthy of Marion" (Oxley as quoted in Hull 1998:1). By 1870, 8th Avenue had become the city's social center populated by the town's business and professional leaders. The Lane House is a good reflection of that social and architectural history.
