DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located a block from the City Dock, 43 Pinkney Street is an example of a small eighteenth century dwelling. Recent architectural, archaeological and historical research indicates that it was built in the eighteenth century and quite likely was used to house troops during the American Revolution. Land records from 1777 state that the site contained a tenement occupied "by this State for a barracks and by George the Fifer's wife" as well as a house occupied by "Brooks the drummer." Recent excavations in the basement have exposed a large kitchen fireplace and beehive oven. The basement was filled during the nineteenth century, probably because of dampness from a nearby underground stream. Although the preliminary findings have been encouraging, more archaeological investigation is still needed. Plans are now underway for restoration so that the building may be used during the Bicentennial Celebration as an exhibit center.

This small gambrel-roofed house, similar in appearance to the Christopher Hohne-Holland house at 45 Fleet Street, is representative of the modest, middle-class dwellings that must have filled eighteenth century Annapolis. One and one-half stories high, it stands on a high foundation laid in English bond brick (now nineteenth century stuccoed). The exterior chimney on the northwest end wall, exhibiting weatherings expressing the fireplaces within, is also laid in English bond but has been extensively patched. Most of the opposite end wall is shared with #41 Pinkney Street. Much of the original, random-width beaded weather boarding, and corner boards, remain, as do the two front shed dormers and one rear (SW) shed dormer. The gambrel roof has been covered with composition shingles.

Surviving early features inside include the stair and its railing, some window trim, some vertical beaded board partitioning, some horizontal beaded board wall sheathing, two original doors--one with two fully raised panels and one batten--with H-L hingles, lathing indicating lost trim, and the fireplaces, one with its mantel in ghosted evidence.
