DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The portion of South Summit Street extending from East Burlington Street south to the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad overpass bisects the largely residential area known to Iowa Citians as the South Summit Street district.

The west side of the street's 300 block formed part of the original boundary of the Iowa City townsite, surveyed in 1839. By the early 1850's a roadway lay along that block. The rest of the present avenue was laid out by the late 1860's and was already being developed as a pleasant, well-to-do suburban residential area, the gentle ridge along which it ran giving the street its name. In about 1880 the street was incorporated into the city.

Fifty structures--48 houses, one sorority house, one store--now stand along the street, 37 of them (or nearly three-quarters) having been built before 1910. Of these, five apparently date from the 1860's, five from the seventies, four from the eighties, 13 from the nineties, and 10 from the first decade of the present century. Three additional houses constructed before 1910 are no longer extant, having been replaced by more modern structures.

A number of the houses are of special interest:

(1) The Kauffman House, #304 South Summit Street. The part of the house facing the street was built in 1868, as an addition to an earlier building, by Levi Kauffman, a nurseryman. It is the earliest house in the district pretending to architectural distinction and an excellent example of the taste of its period, combining classical, gothic, and Italianate features. It is a two-story, high-celinged rectangle of red brick (now painted yellow) with a low attic. The facade is formal and symmetrical, with five windows on the second story, and on the first, two pairs of windows flanking the center door. The windows have heavy stone lintels. On the right-hand end wall is a one-story bay window. A gable over the central bay contains a small gothic lancet. The ornate cornices have paired brackets with pendants. The original veranda has been removed.

(2) The Fairall House, #410-412. This is the oldest house still standing in the district and probably the first dwelling to be built there. It was the farmhouse of the farm that once lay to the east of Summit Street and was built by Truman Fairall between 1861, when he came to Iowa City, and 1868, when the house is listed in a city directory. It has since been extensively remodeled, converted into a double-house, and altered by a wide porch, but it retains its original structural outlines: a low-ceilinged, two-story rectangle with a low attic, of white-painted brick set parallel to the street. It has wide eaves, small, irregularly placed windows and low pitched gables. It is the only rustic house in the area, and the only one of "colonial"--pre-classical and pre-Italian design.

(3) The Morrow House, #415. This unusual and impressive house was built in 1879 by Henry Morrow, local representative of the American Express Company. It represents the last phase of the classical taste for symmetry, but its style is a formalized adaptation of the Umbrian Villa tradition. A central pavillion terminates in an open pediment with returned supported by scrolled corbels. A double front door, flanked by double french windows, open onto a wide veranda. On the lateral walls are bay windows, polygonal on the south, triangular on the north, with bracketed cornices. EINSTRUCTION

The third floor is lit by Palladian eye-brow windows, with latticed screens, and by a segmental arched window in the pediment. A gable end above the pediment is a later addition.

(4) The Swisher House, #419. This exceptionally fine house was built in 1879 or 1880 by Lovell Swisher, a banker, and remains practically unaltered except for a later veranda. It is one of the purest and most elegant examples in the city of Midwestern Italianate Victorian design. Among its notable features are three gable ends, one facing the street and one on each lateral wall, with bracketed cornices and fanciful arched wooden screens, intricately pierced. Each pediment contains an oeil de boeuf. The windows on the two lower floors have lintels with false keystones. The proportions and ornament produce an effect of great solidity and grace.

(5) The Stoddard House, #512. The second oldest extant house in the district, it was built before 1868 by Stephen Stoddard, a millwright. It was moved back from the street and much remodeled in 1924, its present roof and porch dating from that time. The original outlines are still clearly discernible, however, and the windows retain their heavy, classical lintels.

(6) The Payne House, #513. The most opulent and interesting, and also the best preserved house in the district, it was built in 1883 by Stephen E. Payne, manager of the Close Linseed Oil Works. It is frame of complex plan with numerous gables and elaborate Italianate decoration. The simulacra of Italian loggias are particularly striking. The basic shape is cruciform with three elongated facades to the east, north, and south, each with a tripartite, two-story bay window terminating in a steep gable with a pierced screen. A subsidiary gable in the northeast angle of the cross forms a roof for an elaborated balustraded balcony; a smaller but similar balcony is set in the angle formed by the champered bay window on the ground floor is impressively pedimented. A porch with complexly angular plan and roof treatment occupies the northeast corner of the cross on the ground floor. The roof and veranda cornices have brackets and pendants. This house, alone of those in the district, has preserved a cast iron grill forming a fence, with gate, along the line of the sidewalk.

(7) The Stoner House, #603, was built in 1898 by Marcus Stoner, a retired farmer. The house, representative of several others in the district, basically similar in design and all built in the nineties, is one of the best preserved of the group. These are cruciform or L-shaped, with the wings terminating in steep gables with pediments decorated with wooden scroll-work. They are clapboarded and usually have fish-scale shingles on the upper floors and corner porches with brackets and turned columns. There are bay windows on the side wings but not on the street fronts. Other well-preserved houses of this type are #405 and #409.

(8) The Byrnes House, #609. This imposing house was built in 1896 or 1897 by the widow of Dr. Thomas B. Byrnes, and represents the transition from late Victorian design to the Venetian and neo-Georgian tastes of the early  $2^{o+h}$ twentieth century. The frame structure, with cruciform wings ending in gables with fish-scale shingled pediments, exemplifies the older style, while the classical columns and the verandas and the wide windows foreshadow the new.

The house is very large and stately, and has been successfully and discreetly modernized and restored.

(9) The Hertz House, #624. Built in 1893 by Albert J. Mertz, a dry goods merchant, this brick house is similar to several others in the neighborhood, notably its exactly contemporary neighbor to the south, #710. The plan is symmetrically cruciform, with steep gables and a porch in the southwest angle of the cross. The ornament and fenestration are characteristic of the style that was developing in the nineties: there are large windows and greater restraint in decoration than with earlier houses. There is a very large, single plate-glass window on the first floor of the street front under a low segmental arch. The porch has a latticed screen and wooden scrolling in its pediment.

Yet another group of houses in the district, of less historic interest, is nonetheless of some architectural interest as illustrating stages in the developing eclectic styles and tastes of the early 20th century. #620, built in 1923 or 1924, is a good example of the modified New England saltbox popular in the twenties. #733, built in 1923, is a good example of the gambrel-roofed Dutch Colonial idiom. #621, a very drastic reconstruction of a house originally built in the 1860's, now presents the aspect of a porticoed brick neo-Georgian house of Virginian inspiration. The remodeling dates from 1931.

The South Summit Street district, with its fifty buildings of which three-fourths date from between 1860 and 1910, preserves remarkable unity as an ensemble in spite of the extreme variety of architectural styles represented. Later buildings successfully preserved the gracious and dignified residential atmosphere achieved by their predecessors. The street is broad, and the parkings and lots wooded, in many cases with old trees. The houses are set well back from the street, in most cases sixty feet. The flavor of the area is park-like and strongly evocative of the culture of well-to-do middle class Midwestern Americans of the later 19th century. It embodies, in the varied callings and positions in life of its early residents, the social mobility and egalitarianism, and the accumulating wealth, that were characteristic of that culture. Because of the exceptional distinction of some of the houses and the still more exceptional degree to which it has preserved its character intact, the district is to be regarded as a museum of one aspect of American life and history whose preservation is of first-rate importance to the amenity and cultural heritage of the city.

As an additional item of interest, in the front yard at 331 South Summit a six-foot limestone obelisk erected in 1839 marks the southeast corner of the original survey of Iowa City, laid out that year as the new territorial capital of Iowa. By the 1890's this unique landmark was severely defaced, but in 1935 the local D. A. R. chapter restored it and reproduced its inscriptions on attached pronze plates.

For a brief period during the Civil War what was then "a beautiful green" bordering the lower end of the street served as a training ground for Union regiments recruited in Johnson County and vicinity. "Camp Pope<sup>(11)</sup>, as it was christened (for General John Pope, presumably), was established in July 1862 in time to provide a mustering point for the 22nd Iowa Infantry. This military unit subsequently became famours for being one of only three Civil War regiments from either side to suffer 82 per cent casualties in a single engagement, when in 1863 it led the first great frontal assualt on the Confederate entrenchments at Vicksburg, Mississippi. Two other units, the 28th and 40th Iowa Infantry regiments, also mustered and trained at Camp Pope before being sent south to the war zone. The camp was disestablished in December 1862.
