Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Calvin W. Parr House is a late-nineteenth century Victorian cottage standing on a small landscaped lot in a residential neighborhood near downtown Athens, Clarke County, Georgia. The multi-gable roofed, one-story cottage is sheathed in weatherboard and on the interior retains portions of its original stenciled decoration on walls and ceilings.

The Parr House has a lateral T-shaped plan with porches on the front, rear and north sides. It is balloon-framed and rests on a brick pier foundation with brick underpinnings. A kitchen ell composed of the originally detached kitchen and an enclosed breezeway extends to the rear. The house has five gables, two on the front, two on the rear and one on the north side; those on the front and north side are highlighted with sunburst designs, those on the rear have louvered vents. The roof retains a portion of its historic standing seam metal cladding on the rear and south side, and three interior brick chimneys rise from the ridge line. Windows, for the most part, are two-over-two double hung wood sash that retain their original louvered shutters. The windows in a front bay which has a bell cast metal roof are one-over-one. The front door, with transom above, has its original round-headed, etched-glass window and original brass hardware. An "L" shaped porch that wraps around the front and north side features chamfered columns whose brackets have been removed and a delicate scroll-sawn balustrade highlighted with a quatrefoil design. A scroll-sawn balustrade of different design is located on the rear porch.

The interior is organized around a central hall with two rooms to its north and three to the south. The kitchen ell composed of the original detached kitchen and a pantry built from the enclosed breezeway extends to the rear. A bathroom was added in the north corner of the rear porch before 1913. Interior finishing details include original plaster walls and ceilings, pine floors and simple woodwork, except in the kitchen where walls and ceilings have the original narrow beaded tongue and groove paneling. Cast plaster picture moldings are located in three rooms. Much of the original hardware, including cast metal hinges, white metal doorknobs and locks, is intact. The most significant decorative feature in the house is the elaborate stenciling found on the walls and ceilings of the parlor and central hall which was executed by Calvin W. Parr, the first owner who was a prominent Atlanta decorator. The work, located on the frieze in the parlor, dado in the hall and ceilings in both rooms, consists of geometric patterns and classical motifs executed in brilliant colors. The elaborate parlor mantel is of cast iron with marbleized and painted panels of scenes, birds and flowers. Four mantels in other rooms are simple Victorian designs in wood. Electricity was installed in the house in 1914.

The Parr House stands on a small landscaped lot surrounded by lawn. Several large oak trees are scattered in front of the house near the street. To the rear, there are no visible remains of the old well (now filled in), the original rose garden or behind that a vegetable garden. The Parr House is located in an historic residential area dating to the late-nineteenth century. Across the intersection of Peabody and Bloomfield Streets is, on the northeast corner, a cottage c. 1900; on the northwest corner, a modern apartment building; and on the southwest corner, a vacant lot.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Calvin W. Parr House, built in 1889, is historically significant in the areas of architecture, art and local history. In terms of architecture, it is significant as a virtually intact example of a late-nineteenth century Victorian cottage which is a near-perfect example of its type, style and period. In terms of art, the Parr House is significant for its extraordinary examples of interior wall and ceiling stenciling, done by the first owner/occupant of the house, Calvin W. Parr, who practiced this art in and around Athens during the late-nineteenth century. This stenciling is the only known extant example of this once popular form of interior decoration in Athens. In terms of local history, the Parr House is significant as the home of Calvin W. Parr, a noted interior decorator in the Athens area who, along with his six brothers and earlier his father, provided a wide variety of decorative arts services in the region during this period. The above areas of significance support property eligibility under National Register criteria B and C.

Architecture. The overall arrangement of the house, its interior plan and exterior form, its method of construction and construction materials, and its finish and detailing make the house a near-perfect example of its type, style and period. Stylistically the house relates to the late Victorian styles popular in Georgia and other parts of the country that feature multi-gabled roofs, turned balusters and posts, scroll-sawn work, bay windows and asymmetrical porches. The Parr House has all of these, except, surprisingly, turned detailing, which came into vogue after scroll-sawn work and well in time to appear on a house dating from 1889. The Parr House proportions are well-worked out. Its finishing details, including the sunbursts in the gables, the scroll-sawn porch balustrades, and on the interior, the picture moldings and mantels, are simple yet refined, making it a typical yet particularly fine example of the style. The existence of so many of the original features makes it a virtually intact example of a late-Victorian cottage in the Athens area.

Art. The Parr House features outstanding examples of interior wall stenciling and painting, a once-popular form of interior decoration in the Athens area, of which the Parr House may be the last extant example. Calvin Parr, the first owner/occupant of the house, was by profession an interior decorator and was responsible for the stenciling. The work, executed in bright colors, and in many areas highlighted with the application of bronze powders, features a variety of classical motifs including Greek key borders, anthemia, griffins and classical busts and garlands. In addition, the cast-iron parlor mantel with its elaborately painted panels depicting scenes, birds and flowers is an outstanding example of Victorian decorative arts.

Local History. The Parr House is significant for its association with Calvin Parr and his family who had a major influence on the late-nineteenth century decorative arts in the Athens area. Benjamin H. Parr, Calvin's father, was a painter in Athens as early as 1851, and seven of his sons followed him in the business, becoming house and sign painters, decorators or allied craftsmen (glaziers, paint manufacturers, paper hangers and stencilers) The Parr Brothers firm had an office and a paint mill where they prepared the paint used in their work. In 1893, they were hailed as the firm in Athens which did "the large bulk" of painting business "in the city and adjoining section" and were said to have done "the majority of signs which adorn the business part of the city." Calvin W. Parr, the senior member of the firm, specialized in stenciling and wall painting. He began withdrawing from the business around 1897, for reasons of health, and became a co-proprietor, with his son-in-law, of a dairy and stock farm and later a manufacturer and seller of candy. By 1904, the business had been completely dissolved, although several of the younger brothers continued in business on their own.

Subject: The Calvin W. Parr House, Clarke County

Dear Dr. Lyon:

In reference to your Notice of February 8, 1982, we have reviewed the information on the subject nomination to the National Register of Historic Places.

We find no approved transportation plan or proposed project which would have an affect on the site. However, it is requested that, wherever possible, highway rights-of-way not be included in the nomination. If this is not possible, please contact Peter Malphurs or Toni Gardner of my staff to resolve this issue.

Yours very truly,
