DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Cole's Hill, bounded by Carver, North, Water and Leyden Streets, stands at the eastern edge of the central business district in Plymouth, Massachusetts. From a broad plateau running north-south along Carver Street, the hill slopes steeply down to Water Street and the curving shore of Plymouth Bay. On the shore at the foot of the hill lies Plymouth Rock, the traditional landing-place of the Mayflower Pilgrims.

Cole's Hill was given much of its present appearance in the early 20th century in preparation for the celebration of the Massachusetts Tercentenary; at that time, its owner, the Pilgrim Society, cleared the hill of existing buildings and landscaped it for use as a public park, creating a grassed open space with scattered trees and low shrubs. Wooden benches are set at intervals along the hard-topped walkway which circles the hilltop. A simple granite staircase with a center railing of iron runs from the walkway down the seaward slope to Water Street. At the foot of the staircase is a wooden sign carrying a brief history of Cole's Hill.

Several memorials are located on Cole's Hill. The simplest are two stone seats set facing seaward. At the center of the plateau, also facing seaward, is Cyrus Dallin's statue in honor of Massasoit; an heroic bronze mounted on a rough-cut granite base, the composition is approximately 12-feet in height overall. Toward the southern end of the park stands a massive sarcophagus holding what is believed to be the remains of the colonists interred on Cole's Hill during the winter of 1620-1621. The polished granite structure is surrounded by a low hedge. On the seaward side of the sarcophagus is a list of those who died during the first winter at Plymouth; on the landward (Carver Street) side is the following inscription: "In weariness and painfulness, in hunger and cold, they laid the foundations of a state wherein every man . . . should have liberty to worship God in his own way."

Boundaries of the National Historic Landmark: beginning at the intersection of the inside curblines of Carver and North Streets; thence, along the inside curblines of North Street, 195 feet more or less, to its intersection with the inside curblines of Water Street; thence, along the inside curblines of Water Street, 600 feet more or less, to its intersection with the inside curblines of Leyden Street; thence, along the inside curblines of Leyden Street, 115 feet more or less, to its intersection with the inside curblines of Carver Street; thence along the inside curblines of Carver Street, 630 feet more or less, to the point of beginning.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Although some historians have attempted to minimize the significance of the Plymouth Colony of 1620, for most authorities the role of the Pilgrim settlers continues to loom large in any interpretation of the 17th century settlement and development of New England. Their importance was accurately emphasized by the scholar who called the Pilgrims the "spiritual ancestors" of all Americans (Samuel Eliot Morison, By Land and By Sea). Unfortunately, virtually all of the historic sites relating to the earliest period of Plymouth settlement have lost their original character and convey little impression of the 17th century colony.

An exception is Cole's Hill, traditional burial place of those Plymouth colonists, Pilgrims and others, who died in the first grim winter of 1620-1621. Despite the passage of centuries, Cole's Hill has retained its character as a dominant landmark of the Plymouth settlement. Now a public park owned by the Pilgrim Society, the hill affords a sweeping view of the bay into which the Mayflower sailed and the shore on which its grateful passengers landed.

Historical Background

Cole's Hill rises above the curving shore of Plymouth Bay near the foot of Leyden Street, the first street laid out in the original Plymouth settlement. Here, in an abandoned cornfield, whose Indian owners had perished not long before in a mysterious epidemic, the colonists buried those, both Pilgrim and others, who died in the "general sickness" during the first grim winter of 1620-1621. According to local tradition, the dead were buried at night and the graves disguised to keep secret from the nearby Indians the dangerously weakened state of the survivors. In later years, the colonists occasionally mounted cannon on the hill to ward off possible attacks from the sea.

In an early assignment of land tracts, Cole's Hill became the site of the home of Deacon Samuel Fuller, the Mayflower Pilgrim's "physition & chirurgeon." Cole's Hill took its name from James Cole, the tavern keeper who for many years after 1645 maintained a popular establishment on the hill overlooking the bay.

About 1820, Cole's Hill was acquired by the newly established Pilgrim Society, a private historical organization preserving artifacts, documents, and information relating to Pilgrim history. During the early 20th century, in preparation for the celebration of the Massachusetts Tercentenary, the Society transformed the hill into a public park. Existing buildings were removed and walkways and appropriate planting installed.

8. Significance: (1) Cole's Hill, Plymouth

A number of memorials were erected on Cole's Hill at the same time. A granite sarcophagus, given by the General Society of Mayflower Descendants, was dedicated on September 8, 1921. In a crypt beneath the sarcophagus are bones uncovered during excavations on the hill in the 18th and 19th centuries. As no burials are known to have been made on the hill subsequent to those of the first winter, it may well be, as tradition affirms, that these remains are those of the unfortunate ones who braved the terrors of the ocean passage only to die in the first weeks and months of the colony's existence.

Also on the hill is the heroic statue of Massasoit, the Wampanoag chief whose friendship shielded the struggling colony from Indian attack in its early years; the work of Cyrus Dallin, it was erected in 1921 by the Improved Order of Red Men. Other memorials include two stone seats, one presented by the Pennsylvania Society of New England Women, the other by the Society of Daughters of Colonial Wars, Commonwealth of Massachusetts.
