44. Description and House Plan:

Three bay, two-story, central passage dry stone house on high basement, size ca. 22 X 42. There are interior chimneys in each end. All lintels are wood beams, square wooden sills, 6/6 sash. Modillioned cornice across front, returned on ends of house. Front door four panels with transom, sidelights. Original mortar steeple pointed, had some cement, sandy; new repointing is concrete. Cellar entrance in east end. First floor door in east end also, indicates a wing or porch was there at some time.

Some odd features of the house are difficult to interpret: The roof is nearly flat behind the cornice, slopes slightly from front to back. The rear of the house has first floor of stucco, second of weatherboard; old frames. There is a vertical break in the masonry beside the east end door, isolating the southeast corner of the house into a column. These could indicate: planned expansion that didn't happen; a closed in gallery; a fire which burned the roof; a reduction in size of house; conservation of expense on the rear; changing styles, etc.—all antebellum. Interior not seen—there would be more clues there. There is a modern one story frame addition on the rear.

A log quarters faces the rear yard. It is two rectangular cells with chimney inside the larger.

Located on rise above the wide Ohio River valley and before a steep wooded hillside.
