It was designed by Ithiel Town, of New Haven, in the castellated Gothic style. The material employed is a cream-colored granite, obtained from Glastonbury. The central section is eighty feet in depth, the wings seventy, and the whole frontage is one hundred feet. The cost was nearly $35,000. Memorial History of Hartford County, 1886. The Atheneum was this nation's first free art museum, thanks to the large fortune of Hartford's first great merchant, Jeremiah Wadsworth. Its original portion built in 1842, the Wadsworth today is among the ten best art museums in the country. Its wealth of art treasures, colonial furniture, and painting of all periods, its 65 galleries of permanent displays and its rotating exhibits are free to public viewing. Grant, M. H., A Guide to Greater Hartfor Connecticut. The building was reopened to the public early in 1969 after a renovation of the interior that left only the 1842 facade and adjacent side walls standing, and greatly expanded available space to the rear.
