Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Hampton Colored School (1929) is located on Holly Street on the perimeter of the town of Hampton. The school building is a one-story, front-gable, rectangular, frame building with clapboard siding, tin roof, exposed rafters, and a brick pier foundation. The building was constructed by a prominent local black carpenter, Ervin Johnson and is a representative example of black schools in the early twentieth century.

Single, six-over-six double-hung sash windows flank a recessed entry supported by square wood posts on the gable front. Handrails in an "X" pattern connect the posts to the body of the building. Two paneled doors on the rear wall of the recess provide the only access into the building. A square louvered vent is located over the entry in the front gable. The east and west facades have a band of six nine-over-nine, double-hung sash windows. Two small brick flues extend above the roof on the rear and west facades.

The school was designed with two equal-sized rooms, a center wall bisecting the interior space. This wall was designed with the upper half removable, to create one space appropriate for larger meetings and lectures. The east section was later partitioned with a plank wall creating three classrooms in the building. The two small rooms on either side of the recessed entrance were used as cloak rooms. The walls are sheathed in horizontal beaded board paneling. A door was cut in the center partition in 1940 when the building was used as a lunchroom.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Hampton Colored School, located on Holly Street near the town limits of Hampton, is significant both as an intact example of twentieth century vernacular school architecture and for its association with black education in Hampton from 1929 to 1947.

The school was built in 1929 by Ervin Johnson, a local black carpenter. It replaced the first black school in Hampton, a two-room building which had operated since 1898. The school board bought a one-acre site for the new school in 1927, and two years later Johnson, along with C.H. Hazel and Hallie Youmans, bought an additional three acres and donated them to the school. Johnson built the two-room (later three-room) school with volunteers from Hampton's black community. When the school opened for the 1929-30 school year, it served students from the first through the eighth grades. At first, funds were so scarce that it was only open from October to March. Eventually, however, donations from the black community allowed it to operate for a full school year, and it later offered high school courses. It remained the only black school in Hampton until 1947, when Hampton Colored High School was built and the Hampton Colored School became the lunchroom for the high school. (1)
