STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

HISTORIC: Landing site from the Tombigbee River of a band of Napoleonic exiles in 1817. These exiles established the "Vine and Olive Colony." The chain of events that led to the establishment of this unique colony began with the defeat of Napoleon Bonaparte at Waterloo in 1815. A number of Napoleon's military officers and a certain members of his court were banished from France. Gathering in Philadelphia they petitioned Congress for a land grant on which they could cultivate crops familiar to them--grapes and olives. Congress by an act approved on March 3, 1817, granted them four contiguous townships of land near the confluence of the Tombigbee and Black Warrior Rivers in Alabama territory. During the summer of that same year the colonists traveled to their new home, founding "Demopolis" on the White Bluff.

Leader of the group of exiles was General Count Charles Lefebvre Desnouettes, who served as an aide-de-camp to Napoleon at the battle of Marengo, Italy, in 1800, and rode in the carriage with him over the snow in the disastrous retreat from Moscow. After Napoleon's first great defeat and before leaving for exile on the island of Elba, the Emperor said farewell to his Old Guard at the Palace of Fontainebleau, where he embraced Desnouettes as a token of his affection for the whole group. On his return from Elba Desnouettes was at his side again. For this Napoleon named him a "count of the empire" and a lieutenant general. Desnouettes participated in the conclusive battle at Waterloo. Napoleon in his will left General Desnouettes 150,000 francs. Other generals and members of the Vine and Olive colony named as heirs in Napoleon's will were General Charles L'Allemand, Count Real, General Clausel, and General Rigaud.

In late 1818 after the surveyor's reports were complete it was found that the White Bluff and Demopolis were just barely outside the boundary of the newly-surveyed grant. Most of the colonists moved to the south bank of the Warrior River, a distance of about a mile and a half, and named their new village "Aigleville." This site is now within the town's corporate limits.
