National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Mississippi Mills Packing and Shipping Rooms
Wesson, Copiah County, Mississippi

7. DESCRIPTION

Located in downtown Wesson on Main Street (U.S. Highway 51), between Factory and Spring Streets, the Mississippi Mills Packing and Shipping Rooms Building is an imposing, two-story, detached, rectangular, brick building constructed circa 1875 with commercial Italianate influences. The flat roof of the building is encircled by a brick parapet, which at the northeast and southwest elevations is embellished by piers that extend above the parapet at the corners of the building and at each side of a central, two-bay wide, segmentally curved, raised section of the parapet wall. A corbelled brick cornice enhances the parapet. The other major buildings of the Mississippi Mills complex were located on the northwest side of Main Street, but none of these buildings survives. Although the northeast elevation of the Packing and Shipping Rooms building that faces Factory Street apparently was originally the main facade, the northwest elevation facing Main Street is currently used as the main facade.

The northeast elevation is the most ornate, with the two floors being separated by a corbelled belt course and the six bays of each story being accentuated by brick piers. The window and door openings are segmentally arched. The first floor features paired four-over-four, double-hung windows; double-leaf, six-panel doors (the original two-panel glazed doors with panels replacing the glazing) topped by a four-light transom; a six-light window framed by what appears to be the original six-panel hinged shutters; and the other openings of this level have been in-filled with brick. The second story features six window openings, two of which have been in-filled with wooden shingles. The windows are nine-over-nine, double-hung sash.

The first story of the northwest elevation, now used as the main facade of the building, features (from north to south) double-leaf, panelled and glazed doors recessed between display windows; three "picture" windows, above which are two small segmentally-arched window openings; double-leaf, two-panel/four-light, wooden doors topped by a five-light transom; a nine-over-nine, double-hung window; a small four-light window; and a nine-over-nine, double-hung window. The latter four openings are segmentally arched. A wood shingle, pent awning spans the first floor openings. The second story has six segmentally-arched, nine-over-nine, double-hung windows.

The southwest elevation, which faces Spring Street, has a single-leaf, panelled and glazed door with a three-light transom; a "picture" window; two nine-over-nine, double-hung windows; and double-leaf glazed wooden doors with a five-light transom, all within segmentally-arched openings except for the "picture" window. The second story has six nine-over-nine, double-hung windows in segmentally-arched openings.

The first floor of the interior of the building is divided into two main spaces, with a wall running northeast-southwest dividing the building in half. A small office and stairway were added to the northeast corner of the building in the early twentieth century. The original stairway is extant but is enclosed by modern panelling. The first floor features its original chamfered wooden columns, a post-and-lintel mantelpiece, and wooden ceiling, floors, and walls. The second floor is a large open space with square wooden posts (and one round post), brick walls, and wooden ceiling. A post-and-lintel mantelpiece is in the southwest end wall.

Although the building has undergone alterations through the years, the main alterations are limited to the in-filling of some of the window openings with brick or wood shingles, the installation of several "picture" and display windows, and enclosing the original staircase in modern panelling. The building retains a high degree of integrity of association, feeling, location, and setting and conveys the sense of time and place of Wesson during its industrial heyday.

8. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Mississippi Mills Packing and Shipping Rooms Building is locally significant in the area of industry (Criterion A), representing the importance of the cotton and woolen mills industry to the history and development of Wesson and the surrounding area. As discussed on pages 29-32 of the MPS cover document entitled "Historic and Architectural Resources of Copiah County, Mississippi," the town of Wesson was founded as a mill town in 1864 and grew to be the most populous town in Copiah County from 1880 until 1910, the year the mills closed. (The associated historic context developed in the MPS cover document and represented by this property is "Copiah County's Development from the Post-Bellum Period to the End of World War II, 1866-1945.") By 1887, the mills employed 1,200 persons from Copiah and the surrounding areas and created a local demand for a variety of farm produce. In 1890 the Mississippi Mills was one of the largest mills in the South (Wesson Enterprise; Mississippi Statistical Summary). The Packing and Shipping Rooms Building, which also reportedly housed the office of the secretary-treasurer of the mills, gains additional significance because it is the only extant building associated with the Mississippi Mills, other than residential resources, to survive. The period of significance extends from circa 1875, when the building was constructed, to 1910, the year the mills closed.

The Sanborn Fire Insurance Maps from 1886 to 1900 identify this building as the Packing and Shipping Rooms of the Mississippi Mills. By 1905, in addition to housing rooms for the mills, a bank was located in the building, and in 1910 a post office, bank, and general store were also housed there. The mills closed in 1910, and the 1925 Sanborn map shows that at that time the building continued to be used as a post office and bank, and for feed storage (Sanborn Maps). The building currently houses a furniture store.

Although the building has undergone alterations through the years, it retains sufficient integrity to be eligible for listing in the area of industry as the sole extant industrial building of the Mississippi Mills complex. The building retains a high degree of integrity of association, feeling, location, and setting, and retains sufficient architectural integrity to convey the sense of time and place of Wesson's industrial development (see the registration requirements for industrial resources on page 74 of the MPS cover document).
