The Southwest Glasgow Residential District

Physical Description

The residential neighborhood southwest of the commercial is quite large and intact. It encompasses, six streets, with South Green Street, the eastern extent being the largest. The district's northern edge is marked by West Washington Street. The top of which affords a fine view of the downtown area. The majority of the buildings within this area are residential in nature. However, due to the proximity of the square, a few non-residential uses are evident. Very few intrusions are within this area and the sense of the neighborhood is intact. The building dates of the contributing structures range from the early 19th to mid 20th century. This is also a very architecturally complete area, with a large variety of styles evident.

Southwest Glasgow Residential District

Significance

The residential area southwest of the Glasgow Public Square, is an architecturally cohesive neighborhood. The buildings within it offer a wide variety of 19th century styles and they well represent the evolution of popular building trends in Glasgow. This area was the most fashionable place in the community to live for most of the 19th century. This view, made apparent by the excellent preservation of the houses, is still held today.

The only true Gothic style house in Glasgow is located on South Green Street. Known as Seven Gables, this board and batten cottage was constructed circa 1860 by Wilburn Bybee. The most outstanding features and ones which demands the most attention are the gables. Each edged with an unusual bargeboard trim, the whole effect is capped by a finial.

The Theodosia Hall house, also on South Green Street, is another ante-bellum structure. Constructed in 1852 the home is a Greek Revival, side passage plan. Though not containing details of high style, the structure is representative of the popular style of the day.

The Judge James Bryan home located at the corner of West Washington and Jefferson Street was constructed in 1854 only two years after the Hall house. Although in a state of disrepair the Bryan house has retained some wonderfully exterior detailwork. Especially fine is the entrance surround with its late Federal trim. A slightly later wooden portico with elaborate bracket work is also intact.

The preservation of an important historic residential area such as this one will require some specific local planning. But when considering the significance this district has to Glasgow and Barren County the decision should be a simple one.
