Work began on Splitlog Church in 1893. It was still unfinished in 1894 when Mrs. Splitlog died, although it was used for her funeral. In 1895 work was resumed, then halted. Not until late 1896 was the church so nearly completed that a dedication service was finally held - on Nov. 25, 1896. It was blessed as "St. Matthias" and a visiting priest noted in his diary that about 100 of the estimated 500 attending were Catholics. "The people were carried way with the grand ceremony and the music."

Splitlog is constructed of native limestone, approximately 30 x 50 feet in size, with a high, sharply sloped roof. The tall tower and steeple over the front entrance are balanced by a smaller tower at the back. Limestone steps lead up to the handsomely plain double front doors. (The doorway arch contains fifteen stones carved with Indian symbols, but Splitlog descendants do not know their meaning.) Stone fence and gate posts guard the churchyard entrance. Some 30 feet behind the church is the roofless engine house that once supplied it with steam heat.

Interior of the church featured imported finishing lumber - as opposed to locally cut native timber for the rough wood needs -- and much of it was ornately carved. Stained glass windows were installed, although the five thousand dollar organ ordered for the choir loft was not delivered before Splitlog died in 1897. The bronze bell was cast in Belgium. The church contained one curious "vanity" feature: the carving of a single letter of the builder's name over each arched window -- starting to the right of the altar and running around the back of the church and on up to the front again, on the left -- so as to read (to the inattentive worshiper?) S-P-L-I-T-L-O-G.

After Splitlog's death the three acres of land occupied by the church and cemetery were deeded to the Catholic Church. But declining membership and the difficulty of supplying priests to the mission finally brought dissolution of the congregation and in 1930 the church was sold to the Methodists. The altar, confessional and other special Catholic furnishings were removed, however, the bell taken to St. Cathrine's Church in nearby Nowata. For some years the church was used as a school, with occasional Sunday services. Then for many years it stood unused ... and deteriorating.

In 1953, however, Cayuga's church was bought by a private individual, for sentimental reasons, and restored. The Methodist Church, according to terms of the sale, retains an option to rebuy the building and the cemetery is to be maintained. As a pleasant result the visitor today finds a relatively well kept burying ground, spread out informally under large protective oaks. New tombstones are interspersed among the old weathered ones - some ornate marble affairs, still others worn fieldstones on which nothing can now be read. Here is a weed-filled plot protected by an iron fence, there are modern marker flanked by faded sprays of artificial flowers. Among the more impressive stones: those of Eliza and Mathias Splitlog, H. T. Splitlog, and a number of Starrs, another well-known family name in this area.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

More perhaps than any other religious edifice standing in Oklahoma today, Splitlog Church is the handsomely impressive monument to a remarkably able, public-spirited individual.

Mathias Splitlog was born in New York in 1812 -- by ancestry half Cayuga and half French. An important figure on four frontiers -- Ohio, Kansas, Missouri, and Indian Territory -- he died in 1897 ... in Washington, D. C., appropriately enough, while representing the Senecas, into whose tribe he had been adopted. He lies buried beside his wife in the oak-shaded burying ground of the stately limestone church he built, quite possibly the only structure of its kind standing in the United States today to be built by an Indian with his own personal resources.

Says Velma Nieberding: "Distinguished, even in his early years, for his sound business sense, a mechanical and inventive turn of mind, and the ability to estimate the possibilities of the future, Splitlog possessed the quality known as vision." Nannie Lee Burns has written: "He was of a peculiar, eccentric disposition. His ideas were ahead of his time. He was always planning and building." Unable to read or write, Splitlog spoke seven languages. A far from young man when he came to Indian Territory in 1874, he had outlived his wife and all but one of his ten children when he helped dedicate his church, on Nov. 25, 1896. Less than six weeks later, on January 2, he was dead.

Mathias Splitlog was a young man in Sandusky, Ohio, when he met and married Eliza Barnett (1829-1894), thus becoming a member of the Wyandot Tribe. /In 1842 this tribe quit-claimed its Ohio reservation to the United States in exchange for land along the Neosho River in Kansas. Splitlog came west with more than 700 Wyandots in 1843. The tribe later bought land from the Delawares in the fork between the Kansas and Missouri River now occupied by Kansas City, Kansas. But the value of this land soon created sufficient public pressure to dispossess them. Finally, the Senecas, honoring a pledge of friendship made years before in Ohio, turned over to the Wyandots 30,000 acres of their reservation in northeastern Indian Territory. Splitlog and his people moved yet another time, in 1874, and the now 62-year-old leader chose for his new home a site near the junction of the Cowskin and Grand (Neosho in Kansas) Rivers.

Splitlog Church

On it was a spring he named Cayuga in honor of his own tribe and the town he started became known as Cayuga Springs. (As Cayuga, it had a post office from June 11, 1884, to April 30, 1912. It has now virtually disappeared.) He built a sawmill and a grist mill ... established a general store, a blacksmith shop, and a ferry ... erected an impressive three-story-and-basement factory for the manufacture of wagons and buggies. He started a subscription school and (his most ambitious project) began work in 1887 on the "Splitleg Line," forerunner of a section of the present Kansas City Southern Lines. The railroad reached Splitleg City (in nearby Missouri) in 1889. "I go on," Splitleg promised in a celebration speech. "I make Cayuga and Splitleg biggest towns in the Ozarks." But the dream was not fulfilled.

It is not known just when Splitlog first became interested in building Cayuga Mission Church. He was a nominal Catholic, although he had never shown any particular interest in religion. Mrs. Splitlog, however, was a devout Quaker and the Splitlog General Store was generally available for religious services of any interested denomination. Then in 1892 Father William Ketcham came to Indian Territory to work among the various tribes in this area. Splitlog sent for him and in 1893 he was confirmed at a Pontifical Mass at St. Mary's of the Quapaws (a church that still stands some miles to the north). Mrs. Splitlog also became a convert.

Father Ketcham helped Splitlog with his plans for the Cayuga Church, which he began in 1893. When Eliza Splitlog died Sept. 28, 1894, she was buried from the still uncompleted structure. Not until late in 1896 was it finally finished. At the dedicatory service the bell, which had been cast in Belgium, was blessed and first tolled in her memory. Removed in 1930, when the church was sold to the Methodist church, the bell has since been returned. Today it, the well preserved church, and the neatly tended, still used churchyard containing the graves of both Mathias and Eliza Splitlog remain as a quitely impressive tribute to one of Indian Territory's most progressive Indians.
