THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The original depot building in Hinckley was destroyed in a largescale forest fire which ravaged most of Pine County in 1894. The present depot was constructed according to the original plans and reached completion in 1895. It is considered a near duplicate of the original 1871 building.

The present depot consists of a large two story structure, somewhat unique for contemporary depots in this area, flanked by equal one story wings. Constructed in a simple rectangular box shape, the central portion housed the main depot offices and hotel. The side wings, which are not as wide as the central portion were used for dining, baggage, and offices. The building is of frame construction with a hipped roof over the central section and simple pitched roofs with jerkin gables on the flanking sections.

In the reconstruction, the second story of the central section was converted to serve as an apartment for the stationmaster. Recent modifications include the installation of restrooms on the main floor in the men's and women's waiting rooms. The exterior, however, retains its original characteristics and has not been subject to modification.

The interior is presently undergoing rennovation and adaptation to serve as an interpretive center/museum to tell the story of the Hinckley Fire of 1894. The former dining area will be converted into a community meeting space.

The original depot at Hinckley was constructed in 1871. It was quite elaborate for its day and unusual in configuration for the area in which it was constructed. It was nearly a block long and sported a twenty bed hotel in addition to a dining room, waiting rooms, baggage room and railroad offices. In general the depot was a kind of social center, a focal point for the community. On September 1, 1894, this depot burned along with the town of Hinckley. More than 418 people lost their lives in that fire.

It was from the original Hinckley Depot that Thomas G. Dunn, the telegrapher on duty, sent out the last words from Hinckley as the fire destroyed the town. Many of Hinckley's residents waited in vain at the depot for the arrival of the Southbound Limited to carry them to safety. The Limited never reached Hinckley because the railroad bridge had burned out and was forced to shift into reverse because of the raging fire which blocked its path. It carried with it many people, but only reached nearby Skunk Lake. The Limited's passengers sought refuge in the lake and survived. Dunn, however, waited at his telegraph key in his office for news of the Limited which never came. Dunn remained at his key until the fire reached the depot and died attempting to find safety in a nearby pit.

Within a year of the fire, the depot was replaced with a duplicate, based on the original plans. It is this depot which remains today as a symbol of the Great Hinckley Fire.

The Great Hinckley Fire caused great destruction not only to property and lives but to the forests which had provided the prime economic asset for Minnesota's lumber industry. Realizing this loss to economy and to the environment, the area of the fire was to be the site for the first major conservation program in Minnesota. This program provided for large-scale reforestation of the area and increased attention to forestry and conservation.

The depot is in process of being preserved and adapted as an interpretive center/museum of the Great Hinckley Fire. The buildings and exhibits housed therein will serve to educate the public in the history of the area, the lumbering industry, the devastation caused by the fire, the rebuilding of the community, and the conservation movement.
