NATIONAL REGISTER CRITERIA STATEMENT (if applicable)

The LaCroix-Mosher House is significant for its association with the town's ~~late 19th~~, ~~early 20th~~ century real estate development and its stylish Colonial Revival design. It meets National Register criteria A and C at the local level and retains integrity of setting, location, materials, workmanship, design, feeling, and association. The boundaries indicated on the attached assessors map are those of current ownership.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE Describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within the community.

This large imposing Colonial Revival house is one of the few grand houses of its type from the turn of the century which are still intact in Southbridge today. Another large, elegant Colonial Revival residence was built about the same period on Elm Street next to the Town Hall by C.A. Paige. That house is no longer intact, a modern office building has been attached to its front. The Albert B. Wells House (ca. 1904, Daniel H. Burnham, Chicago) in the Main Street Historic District is the only other existing house of comparable size, design or importance.

Characteristic of the finest Colonial Revival mansions of the day, this house is broad in its design with an expansive hip roof, elegant dormers with swan's neck broken pediments, large windows, deep porch and Classical ornamental details. Less common but not unusual for the style is the broad cylindrical two story corner bay.

Similarities between this house and large Colonial Revival houses in Worcester designed by the well-known Worcester architect George H. Clemence, suggest that Clemence may have been the

The LaCroix-Mosher House was built by Joseph LaCroix, who became the president of the Hyde Manufacturing Company in 1897. Founded by J. P. Hyde about 1875, the company made knives in competition with other Southbridge cutlery firms Harrington Cutlery and Stephen Richard. Like its competitors, the company prospered.

LaCroix had first worked with Stephen Richard and had even lived for more than a year with the Richard family. About 1885 he was persuaded to join Hyde's Company, bringing many of Richard's tempering secrets with him. By 1894 he had gained one-eighth interest in the company. Hyde sold most of his stock in the company in 1897 to LaCroix and Myron B. Clemence. After Hyde's death in 1897 the company continued to prosper.

In 1905 LaCroix's son, Arthur, age twenty-one was made an officer in the company which employed about 38 and produced some 1800 knives a day. The son appears to have built a house next door at 44 Everett Street around 1910-1915. Some time during the 1920's Joseph LaCroix sold his house and both the father and son occupied the house next door. During the late 1920's and 1930's, 52 Everett Street was occupied by Ira Mosher who became a vice president, general manager and treasurer of American Optical Company.

This house was built as an extension of the suburban estate district which had existed since the early-19th century along the section of Main Street east of the central business district. During the early-20th century members of the town's important families and industrialists occupied houses in that section.

architect. During the 1890's Clemence kept an office in Southbridge as well as one in Worcester. He also designed the Southbridge Armory, the Elm Street Fire House (form #D-401) and most, if not all, of the buildings for the Worcester and Southbridge Street Railway (1902-1903), including the Overlook Hotel in Charlton.

Everett Street was first developed around the 1860's with a few smaller houses. Development continued gradually in the 1870's with middle class houses. By 1898 the section of the street which included this lot was still undeveloped, although the atlas shows that it had been divided into lots. This was the only grand house ever to have been built here.
