Narrative Description

DESCRIPTION

The Tremont neighborhood is located one mile south of downtown on the near west side of Cleveland. The neighborhood boundaries are well defined by the Cuyahoga River (to the north and east) and interstate highways (to the west and south). The topography of Tremont is distinctive. While the neighborhood is flat, the Cuyahoga River, industrial flats, and the Tremont Valley Playfield and their respective valleys provide edges to the neighborhood. While close to downtown Cleveland, Tremont has remained relatively isolated because of topography. There is a central greenspace, Lincoln Park, bounded by W.14th, W.11th, Kenilworth, and Starkweather.

Tremont has two varying street patterns. One pattern is centered around Lincoln Park with north-south streets, including W. 10th, W. 11th, and W. 14th Streets, and east-west streets including Starkweather, Kenilworth, and Auburn. The other street pattern (to the east of West 10th Street) was a grid of diagonal streets, including Jefferson, College, and Literary that have a southwest to northeast direction, and Tremont, Professor, and West 7th Street that have a northeast to southwest direction. Several triangular shaped blocks were formed where these two street patterns met.

COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS

The main commercial strips in the neighborhood are Professor Avenue and West 14th Street, south of Lincoln Park. Secondary commercial strips include Starkweather between W.8th and St. Theodosius Church, Kenilworth between W.10th and W.14th, Fairfield between W.10th and W.14th, and Literary between W.7th and W.11th. There are commercial nodes in residential neighborhoods at the corner of W.11th and Kenilworth, and W.11th and Auburn, and Literary and W.10th. There are no commercial properties on Fruit, Brayton or Thurman. Larger 2 to 3 story brick commercial blocks are located on Professor, W.11th, and W.14th Streets. There are one and two story commercial storefronts that were added to two story single family residences throughout the neighborhood. Several of these are found on Professor and Starkweather.

RELIGIOUS BUILDINGS

There are fifteen churches in Tremont; eight are located on W. 14th Street, three on W. 11th Street, three on College, and one on Starkweather. Five of the churches are Byzantine in style, three are Gothic, four are Romanesque, one shingle clad, one eclectic, and one contemporary. They were built between 1865 and c. 1960. Eleven churches are brick, one stone, and one frame. Two rectories, a social hall, and five schools are associated with churches.

SCHOOLS

There are eight buildings that have operated as schools in Tremont; one public at Tremont and Jefferson, and seven religious on Professor, Howard, Starkweather, College, W. 11th, and W.14th Street (2). Seven of the schools are brick, one stone, and range from one to four stories in height. They were built between 1884 and 1957. Architectural styles include Victorian Gothic, Victorian Romanesque, Jacobethan, eclectic and contemporary.

INDUSTRY

Although industry played a major role in the development of the Tremont neighborhood, there is only one large industrial concern within the boundaries of the proposed district, the red brick Jefferson Gospel Press complex at Jefferson and W. 7th Street, a publishing company. However, smaller industrial concerns were prevalent, including print shops, bakeries, sausage factories, and auto repair businesses. These businesses were in one and two story frame and brick buildings in the rear of the lot. Some of these businesses can still be found in the neighborhood. At one time they were found on W.11th, Literary, Kenilworth, Professor, Starkweather, and Tremont.

RESIDENTIAL STRUCTURES

Multiple Family Structures

There are five brick apartment buildings in Tremont, four on W.14th, and one on Fairfield near W.14th. They range in height from two to six stories, and were built between 1898 and 1914. There are four terraces, built between c.1870 and 1910, located on W.13th Place, two on West 11th, and one on Kenilworth.

Applicable National Register Criteria
(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing.)

- [X] A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- [ ] B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- [X] C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- [ ] D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

Criteria Considerations
(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply.)

Property is:

- [X] A owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- [ ] B removed from its original location.
- [ ] C a birthplace or grave.
- [ ] D a cemetery.
- [ ] E a reconstructed building, object, or structure.
- [ ] F a commemorative property.
- [ ] G less than 50 years of age or achieved significance within the past 50 years.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Tremont area is eligible for the National Register under Criteria A and C for its ethnic heritage, social history, and prominent examples of architecturally significant Eastern European churches. The area is significant for its association with the diverse ethnic groups that immigrated to Cleveland to work in the rapidly growing industrial flats of the Cuyahoga River. The dense fabric of the area, consisting primarily of a large stock of urban vernacular worker housing, early twentieth century commercial buildings. ethnic associated social halls, and several prominent religious structures, communicates the district's association with this important period of Cleveland's history. The churches designed in the Neo-Byzantine style clearly communicate the ethnic association of the area. These churches, along with the area's other high style churches, serve as prominent landmarks in the community.

EARLY HISTORY

Tremont's early history, beginning in 1851, is marked by its transformation from a rural to a suburban community. The founding of Cleveland University (1851-3) and the presence of Civil War camps (1861-5) were the two most significant events of the area's early history. Once part of Brooklyn Township, Tremont's early landowners included the Branch, Kellogg, Aiken, and Hadlow families. The earliest major development occurred in 1851 with the founding of Cleveland University. The area was known originally as University Heights, with the university buildings located at Jefferson, W.7th and College Avenue (the present site of the Gospel Press Buildings).

Cleveland University was patterned after Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island, with a practical instead of a classical curriculum. The university was made possible by the philanthropy of John Giles Jennings and Thirza Pelton. The university president, Dr. Asa Mahan, and several faculty members, came from Oberlin College. Mahan and the trustees envisioned a national university with an orphans asylum, old age retreat, and female seminary. The street names, Professor, Literary, College and University date from this period. The Cleveland University Building housed Humiston Institute (also known as the Cleveland Institute) from 1858 to 1868. Later the building housed the Cleveland Homeopathic Hospital. The buildings were gone in the October 21, 1861. From June 1862 to August 1865, Camp Cleveland was located in the area bounded by W.5th, W.7th, Marquardt, and Railway. Approximately 15,000 troops were trained here. Two groups of Confederate prisoners were housed at the camp. Tremont developed slowly because of an isolated location to the south of Cleveland. Access to Cleveland was through the congested flats along the Cuyahoga River, with bridges at Columbus Road and Central Street (now West 3rd Street). Pelton Park (later known as Lincoln Park) bounded by W.11th, W.14th, Kenilworth, and Starkweather became the center of the neighborhood. The park dates from 1851, when it was laid out as part of the subdivision then privately owned. It was purchased by the city in 1879.

The Tremont area was annexed to the city on August 6, 1867.

Farmland was originally subdivided into large lots with average lots of 66 foot widths and 200 foot depths in the Pelton and Jennings, William Slade, B. Pelton and J. G. Jennings Subdivisions. Buildings that remain from this initial period of development include:

INDUSTRIALIZATION

Industrialization had a substantial impact on Cleveland and Tremont in the post-Civil War era. The first industry in the Tremont area was Lamson and Sessions (fastener manufacturers), previously located in Mt. Carmel, Connecticut. Lamson and Sessions opened in 1869 on Scranton Road. Later industries were Ferry Cap and Screw Company, founded in 1876; Maher and Brayton Company, founded in 1880; and Wilcox, Treadway & Company, hardware manufacturers.

Industrial growth was also rapid between the Civil War and World War I. Iron and steel production and employment grew quickly.

1880	20	3,275
1900	19	8,326

Cleveland population figures from 1850 to 1920 are:

1850 - 17,031	1870 - 92,829	1890 - 261,353	1910 - 560,663
1860 - 43,417	1880 - 160,146	1900 - 381,768	1920 - 796,841

Although industry was central to the development of Tremont, very little industry was actually located in the neighborhood. There were, however, examples of backyard businesses, including bakeries and print shops. The Jefferson-Gospel Press, at W.7th and Jefferson, is the only large industrial building within the historic district boundaries. It is an imposing, significant complex that includes a 3-story brick complex with Gothic elements, built in various stages in the 1930's.

CENTRAL VIADUCT - 1888

The Tremont area remained relatively isolated from the rest of the city until the opening of the Central Viaduct. Prior to its construction, access to downtown Cleveland was through the industrial flats, either by the low-level Central Way (West 3rd Street) or further north at Columbus Road.

The Central Viaduct was constructed between 1887 and 1888 at a cost of $1 million and was opened in December 1888. The 1,088 foot long viaduct connected Jennings Avenue with Central Avenue in downtown Cleveland. The viaduct ended the geographic isolation of the neighborhood with a high-level connection above the flats and the Cuyahoga River. It provided a connection similar to what the Superior Viaduct (1875-78) provided for the west side of the city. Its completion made further industrial, commercial, and residential growth possible. Streetcar connections now were possible between downtown and Tremont. The first electric streetcar line opened as the South Side Railroad Jennings Avenue line on May 19, 1889. Streetcar lines went down Jennings Avenue and Professor Avenue to Starkweather. The Abbey Road Viaduct would connect Tremont with neighborhoods to the west. The viaduct was demolished in 1939.

The period of industrialization was responsible for the development of Jennings Avenue (later W. 14th St) into a wealthy residential street, the home to local industrialists, as well as the development of the vernacular residential Tremont of frame homes for factory workers. With the streetcar lines along Professor Avenue and W.14th Street, commercial districts developed.

JENNINGS AVENUE

Jennings Avenue's popularity with the affluent was probably due to its proximity Lincoln Park, its large property lots, and its distance from industry. In the 1870's industrialists began building substantial high-style Victorian homes on Jennings, significant churches, and in the early 20th century, apartment buildings. Jennings has homes similar to those on Franklin Avenue on the west side, East 55th Street in the Broadway neighborhood, and Archwood Avenue in the Brooklyn Centre neighborhood.

Extant single family houses include the Colonial Revival Olney House (c1870, altered c 1895), and the Neo-Classic Olney Gallery (1893). Both are listed in the National Register of Historic Places (NR). The Colonial Revival John Kotsybar House (1910) remain on the street. The homes of S. W. Sessions, Isaac Porter Lamson (owners of Lamson and Sessions), and architect J. N. Richardson (of the firm of Cudell and Richardson) were once on this street. The eclectic Gothic Pelton Apartments (1901) is located on the NE corner of W.14th and Kenilworth, was designed by the firm of Knox and Elliot. The 6-story Argonne Apartment (formerly the Jennings;NR), built 1898, at W.14th and I-490 was designed by local architect, J. N. Richardson. These apartments were built in what is commonly referred to as the second phase of apartment design. Rather than the rowhouse forms of the 1860's and 70's, apartments built from the 1880's to the turn-of-the-century were characterized by elevators, courtyards, and architecturally distinct designs. This period reflects a change in attitude toward apartment living. Rather than being thought of as potentially "immoral" housing that reflected more of a transient existence than a sense of home, apartments now represented collective efficiency, the economy created by concentrating many household needs. (Society of Architectural Historians) Two significant churches were built on Jennings in the 1890's: the Romanesque Revival Pilgrim Congregational Church (1893) (NR) and the Gothic Lincoln Park Methodist Church (1896).

Jennings Avenue lost favor with the affluent shortly after the turn of the century. The Lamsons, Jennings, Olneys, and other prominent families left the area for the suburbs of Shaker Heights, Cleveland Heights, and Lakewood. The neighborhood became filled with Eastern European immigrants that came to work in the steel mills of the industrial flats.

WORKING CLASS HOUSING

With improved transportation between Tremont and downtown Cleveland, and industrial development along the nearby Cuyahoga River, the neighborhood became the site of a variety of single and multi-family residences. A large percentage of residents walked to work in the nearby flats. Similar to other Cleveland neighborhoods from the time, Tremont was economically heterogeneous with a mix of income levels. The poor, middle class, and wealthy lived here.

The earliest Tremont subdivisions were planned with large lots. The John G. Jennings Subdivision, recorded September 24, 1851, included 66' wide and 228' deep lots. The Pelton and Jennings subdivision, recorded August 10, 1855, includes 66' wide and 200' deep lots. The S.S. Stone subdivision, subdivided December 28, 1857, included lots that were 25' wide and 100' deep. The Brayton and Yates subdivision, recorded April 16, 1870, has 30' wide by 140' deep lots.

As immigrant settlements increased, Tremont became very densely populated. The 60 foot wide lots in the early subdivisions were divided into 30 foot wide lots. Two and sometimes three dwellings were built in lots initially meant for one dwelling. Two to four family dwellings replaced single family homes as the norm for the neighborhood. The density can be seen in the large number of houses that were built to the back of houses which fronted on the street (Photos 76,79,82,84,85). Houses were also built on alleys with no setbacks. An example of this is Thurman Court, between Starkweather and Jefferson (Photos 296,297). There were no zoning requirements in Cleveland until 1929, after the neighborhood had developed.

SINGLE FAMILY HOUSES

The 2 or 2 1/2 story frame, gable roofed, rectangular shaped house, (see House Type B in description) 2 to 3 bays wide is found throughout Tremont. Numerous examples of this house type are found on Brayton, W.10th, and W.11th Streets.

The 1 or 1 1/2 story frame, gable roofed, rectangular shaped house type (see C in the description) is the most common in the neighborhood. Several examples are found on Brayton, Starkweather, and Thurman Court.

The Homestead House Type (see E in description) is a 2 1/2 story square shaped house with peaked hip roof. One example is found in the neighborhood on W.11th Street.

The 1 1/2 to 2 story Tri-gabled Ell House Type (see F in description) is common in Tremont. Several examples of the house are found on Auburn, Professor and W.11th Street.

TWO TO FOUR FAMILY HOUSING

The most common two family house type in Tremont is the Cleveland Double (2A in description). The traditional Cleveland Double is a rectangular-shaped two family house with a gable or clipped gable roof and full porches up and down. This house type is scattered throughout the neighborhood and was constructed between 1908 and 1933. This house type is found throughout Cleveland's neighborhoods. The Cleveland Double allowed for greater density with the appearance of the single family detached house with front and rear yards.

Another less common type of 2 family residence is a 2 1/2 story, frame, rectangular shaped, gable roofed residence with side by side units and full first floor porch (2B in description). These houses were constructed between 1900 and 1905. Five of these houses were built on Starkweather Avenue near W.10th Street in 1901 by developer Lang. Four other examples exist in the neighborhood on W.11th Street and Auburn Avenue.

There is one example of a 2 1/2 story frame, T shaped house with a wraparound porch (2C in description). It was built c. 1900 and is located at 2225 W. 11th Street.

After the Cleveland Double, the second most common two family house type is a 2 1/2 story frame, Tri-gable Ell structure with cross gable roof (2E in description). These houses were built between 1880 and 1910. These houses are concentrated on the south side of Tremont along Brayton, Starkweather, Fruit, and also on W. 10th, Literary, and College. This house type can also be found in some of the city's oldest neighborhoods, including the St. Clair-Superior neighborhood.

There are also a number of four-family houses in Tremont. A variation of the Cleveland Double (4A), that has a similar look to the street, housed four families. These were built in Tremont between 1908 and 1924. This housing type had two units up and two units down. This house type is found on Starkweather, Jefferson, Professor, and W. 11th Streets.

A second type of four-family dwelling was a frame, rectangular shaped structure, with gable roof and either no porches or a first story porch (4B in description). Two families lived up and two families lived downstairs. This house type was built between 1910 and 1945. It can be found on Thurman, Tremont, W.10th, Jefferson and Kenilworth.

COMMERCIAL BUILDINGS

The oldest commercial buildings in Tremont can be found at major intersections. An example is the corner of W.11th and Fairfield which appears to have developed in the late 1880's. Buildings located here are a narrow 3-story brick Italianate structure, a 2-story brick Italianate structure, and a 2-story frame building with gable roof.

The corner of W.11th and Kenilworth was another major commercial node that includes two 2-story frame Eastlake commercial buildings (c1890), the flat-iron Lemko Hall (1909), and five other commercial buildings.

When the opening of the Central Viaduct (1888) provided for streetcar service along West 14th and Professor Avenues through the Tremont neighborhood, these streets developed as the neighborhood's major commercial centers.

PROFESSOR AVENUE

A three block long commercial strip developed along Professor, between W.10th and Jefferson. Professor Avenue includes the 3-story flat-iron Ukrainian American Building and Loan (1920), the Neo-Classic Lincoln Heights Savings and Loan (1912), and the Polish Veterans Post #1 (c1900). Several houses have later storefront additions on the street. Businesses located on the street in the 1930 City Directory included Kroger's, Quo Vadis Furniture, Tetlak Brothers Hardware, Aaron Tanzman Dry Goods, Peter Sekerak Dry Goods, Stanley Szafranski Hardware, and several professional offices for dentists and physicians.

WEST 14TH STREET

A secondary commercial district developed on West 14th Street (earlier Jennings Avenue) along two blocks of West 14th Street, between Lincoln Park and Branch Avenue. This street includes 2 and 3 story frame and brick commercial buildings from the early 20th century. Businesses located here in the 1930 City Directory include Gulick Furniture, Peter Sekerak Dry Goods, W. 14th Drug Store, Kroger's, Riehl Hardware, Fisher Brothers Grocers, and A & P Grocers.

Characteristics of early 20th century commercial brick structures include 1-3 story height, textured brick of various colors, symmetrical facades, flat roofs hidden behind parapets with coping, and windows grouped in pairs to stress horizontality. These buildings reflect the presence of small town or neighborhood scale commerce.

RELIGIOUS PROPERTIES

The fifteen churches and associated structures (2 rectories, 1 social hall and 5 parochial schools) in Tremont reflect the important role religious institutions played in the ethnic neighborhood. Not only do they reflect the importance of religion to the community, but they also serve a secular function, acting as a focal point for a community's social and cultural ties between European homeland and the local neighborhood. Typically these churches were high style and used high quality materials, reflecting their importance to the communities. As congregations grew and prospered, elaborate masonry structures were built. In Tremont, five of these churches are Byzantine in style, four are Romanesque, three are Gothic, and one is eclectic.

ETHNIC HISTORY

In the early 20th century, the Tremont area was home to Ukrainian, Rusin, Lemko, Ruthenian, Russian, Greek, Polish, Slovak and Syrian immigrants. As an industrial city on the Great Lakes, Cleveland witnessed a large immigration from Eastern and Southern Europe between 1870 and 1924, the result of oppressive political and economic conditions in Austria-Hungary, Germany, and Russia at the time. Tremont was attractive to these immigrants because of its location near the industrial flats with its many steel mills and job opportunities. Although the neighborhood has representatives from several ethnic groups, population statistics from 1930 reveal that the neighborhood was predominately Polish (60.6%). Other groups represented were Russians (13.8%), Czechoslovakians (10.5%), Austrians (6.1%), Germans (1.3%), Italians (1.2%), Syrians (.9%) Yugoslavians (.8%) and Greeks (.8%). Eleanor Ledbetter in The Slovaks of Cleveland described a situation which applied to most of the immigrant groups who came to America in the great southern and eastern European immigration in the late 19th and early 20th centuries: "...conditions of political disaffection, of economic difficulty, of oppressive taxation, with the denial of political representation, of language and of education, naturally make for emigration, once a goal has been discovered."

The change to an ethnic neighborhood is illustrated by building ownership changes. The Olney House and Gallery were sold to the Ukrainian American Center in 1909. The Isaac Porter Lamson and S. W. Sessions homes were demolished and replaced by the Annunciation Greek Orthodox Church in 1919. The Lincoln Park Methodist Church became St. George Antiochan orthodox church in 1927.

The significance of the Eastern European ethnic heritage of this neighborhood is indicated by the number of churches that dominate the skyline of the neighborhood. These churches were the most important unifying force for the immigrants. Churches were important in maintaining customs and language beyond the first and second generation American. And once the ethnic population has moved from the neighborhood, the church remains an important link between later generations and the Tremont neighborhood.

LIVING CONDITIONS

As immigration continued, the resulting high density of the neighborhood produced some poor living conditions. The Second Renaissance Revival Lincoln Bathhouse (1921) was built to provide bathing facilities for neighborhood residents who did not have running water. The Merrick House Social Settlement was founded in 1919 by the National Catholic War Council to promotes citizenship and the Americanization of the neighborhood residents. In 1936, the book Between Stacks and Spires by Charles Hendry and Margaret Svensen, published by the Welfare Federation of Cleveland, examined the authors state that "one can sense the profound poverty of the area driving through it, one can fully sense the utter physical isolation of the area however, apart from the aerial survey". This early study looked at poverty and juvenile delinquency in the neighborhood. Families on relief and with the lowest median rents were concentrated to the east of Tremont Street. Middle class residents of the neighborhood lived along W. 11th and W. 14th Streets. Pollution from the nearby steel mills was also a problem. According to Hendy and Svensen, "paint fights a continuous battle against cinders and soot and sulphur fumes that destroy the pigment and place a blight on the beauty." The book Planes of Living in Cuyahoga County by Howard Whipple Green mapped out living conditions in the country from the 1940 census. The Tremont, Ohio City, Central and Fairfax neighborhoods in Cleveland and Bird Town in Lakewood, had the lowest living standards in Cuyahoga County. These neighborhoods had the lowest rents, the largest numbers of family units unfit for human habitation, and family units without private indoor water closets.

POLES

Polish immigration to Cleveland began in the 1880's. It continued into the 1920's, with the largest number of arrivals coming in 1903. In 1930 the Polish foreign born population in Cleveland peaked at 33,713. Before World War I, emigration occurred primarily because of economic conditions in Poland (though it was sometimes for religious and political reasons). An independent Polish state did not exist between 1795 and 1919. It was divided between Austria-Hungary, Russia, and Germany. And though most emigrating Poles hoped to return to the old country when Poland was free, most did not return. After the war, the reasons for emigration were mostly political, and a result of government instability and the dictatorship of the 1920's and 1930's. These later emigrants left with no hope of returning. Early Polish immigrants settled primarily in the Middle Atlantic and Midwest, including New York and Buffalo; Scranton, Wilkes-Barre, and Pittsburgh; Cleveland and Toledo; and Chicago. In some cities, such as Buffalo, they were concentrated in one area, whereas in other cities they could be found spread throughout many neighborhoods.

Tremont was one of four large Polish neighborhoods in Cleveland. The oldest was Warszawa, centered around St. Stanislaus Church. A portion of this neighborhood is listed in the National Register of Historic Places. The second neighborhood Poznan was in the vicinity of E.79th and Superior. The Tremont community was known as "Kantowa", taking its name from St. John Cantius Church (established 1897). The fourth neighborhood was Josephatowa near St. Clair and E. 33rd Street.

The Polish were not concentrated in one section of Tremont, but were scattered throughout the neighborhood. There are several landmarks associated with the Tremont Polish community. St. John Cantius Church (1925), School (1913), and Rectory, at Professor and College was the center of the Polish neighborhood. The Sacred Heart of Jesus National Catholic Church (1914), 2310 W.14th, was the first such congregation in the city. The Polish Library Hall, 1108 Kenilworth, housed a notable collection of Polish literature. It closed in 1982. Wiadomosci Codzienne or the Polish Daily News was published in the neighborhood at 1017 Fairfield Avenue. It supported the Socialist regime in Poland and advanced a moderately free-thinking viewpoint. It ceased publication in 1966. It was the last Polish daily newspaper in Ohio.

UKRAINIANS

The Tremont area was the center of Cleveland's Ukrainian American community from 1910 until after World War II. The Cleveland Ukrainian community numbered about 35,000 people in 1976. Ukrainians came to the city between the 1880's and World War II. A definite number is difficult to determine, because they were counted with Austrians, Hungarians, Poles or Russians in the U.S. Census. Ukrainians were formerly known as Ruthenians after the former state of Rus-Ukraine. Ukrainians emigrated to the United States because of economic reasons, with the objective to raise money and to return to the Ukraine. In the United States they settled in the industrial areas of the northeast, and 90% still reside in urban areas (unlike Canada or South America where Ukrainian settlement was mainly in rural areas). In 1930 they were concentrated in New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey. Large Ukrainian neighborhoods developed within heavily settled cities, such as the Lower East side of Manhattan, Franklin Street in north central Philadelphia, the northwest side of Chicago, and Tremont in Cleveland.

Ukrainian landmarks in Tremont include churches and social halls. There were two churches The Ruthenian Greek Catholic Church of Sts. Peter and Paul (1909), and St. Vladimir Ukrainian Orthodox Church (1919), sold in 1966. Both congregations have since moved elsewhere. The Ukrainian Labor Temple (1927) was the home of a radical labor union. The Ukrainian American Center, a cultural center for Ukrainian dance and theater, was located at 2241-2255 West 14th Street, between 1909 and 1988. The Ukrainian Savings and Loan (1920) was located at the corner of Professor and Literary. A Ukrainian museum and archives (begun in 1952) is located at 1202 Kenilworth. After World War II, as the Ukrainian community became economically prosperous there was an exodus from Tremont to Parma, a suburb to the south of Cleveland.

LEMKOS

Lemkos or Lemkians, were Carpatho-Rusyns from Lemkovina on the northern side of the Carpathian Mountains in what is part of is part of present day Poland. The largest immigration period was between 1880 and 1914. At its height in the 1930's, the Greater Cleveland community numbered 25,000 people. The majority of Lemko people emigrated because of religious reasons and the oppression of the Eastern Orthodox faith by the Austrian-Hungarian government. Most Carparho-Rusyns went to urban areas in the northeast and middle Atlantic states, with more than half settling in the coal and steel producing regions of Pennsylvania. Large settlements in Ohio were found in Cleveland and Youngstown. The Lemko settlement in Tremont was near West 14th Street and around Starkweather and Professor. St. Theodosius Russian Orthodox Church (1913) (NR) and Holy Ghost Byzantine Catholic Church (1909) served the community. Lemkos founded the Lemko Association, an organization founded in 1929 to preserve the ethnic traditions and cultural ties with the homeland. This association was headquartered in Cleveland from 1931 to 1939, then moved to Yonkers, New York. The first location was at 1037 Starkweather. It moved to 1205 Starkweather in 1937 and to Lemko Hall in 1946.

SLOVAKS

Slovaks came from the part of Austria-Hungary that is now Slovakia. They emigrated primarily out of economic necessity, though a few left to escape Magyarization or the suppression of their culture by the ruling government. They settled primarily in the industrial northeast and Midwest, with half found in Pennsylvania, and large numbers in Ohio, New Jersey, and New York. Very large communities were established in Cleveland and Detroit.

The first Slovaks in Cleveland settled on the east side of the Cuyahoga River. They moved eastward to the Buckeye Road area and westward to Ohio City, Tremont and Bird Town in Lakewood. It has been claimed that at one time in the early part of the century, Cleveland had more Slovaks than any other city in the world. They founded St. Wendelin's Roman Catholic Church on Columbus Road in Ohio City, and when it proved to be inadequate for residents of Tremont, St. Johns Independent Slovak Catholic Church was founded in 1917 at 2425 W. 11th Street. The name was later changed to Our Lady of Mercy, and a new church was built in 1948. Slovaks also built a Lutheran Church on W.14th (Martin Luther, was demolished for the construction of I-71). Slovenska Baptist Church, at the corner of Tremont and College Streets was built in 1919. (It later became First Ukrainian Baptist Church and is now Iglesia De Dios Pentecostal, further illustrating the ethnic changes the neighborhood has undergone.) Slovaks also constituted a portion of the congregation of the Byzantine Catholic Church of the Holy Ghost (1909). Like many of the other ethnic groups in Tremont, many second and third generation Slovaks left the neighborhood for Cleveland's suburbs, especially Parma.

GREEKS

The Tremont area also has a sizeable Greek presence. The Cleveland Greek community that formed between 1890 and 1920 had a total population of 5,000 at its peak in the 1930's. Greeks immigrated to America for economic reasons. Great increases in population and insufficient land, food, and jobs forced them to seek opportunity elsewhere. Most of them settled in the northeast and Midwest (with the exception of California which now has the third largest Greek population in the U.S.). Cleveland's largest concentration of Greeks was in an area bounded by Bolivar Road, E. 9th Street, and Ontario, near the Central Market, known as Greek Town (demolished). The Tremont Greek community was formed by immigrants from Greek Town. Annunciation Greek Orthodox Church (1916-19) and School at W. 14th and Fairfield was the city's first Greek Orthodox church. The Greek Progressive Association was located in the second floor of the Kandis Building at W. 11th and Fairfield. The small Greek population in the neighborhood was concentrated on the north side and centered around Fairfield Avenue. Greek surnames such as Alexakis, Georgitsos, Aedonis, and Christos were found in the 1930 City Directory in this area.

ARABS

Arabs, mostly Syrians and Lebanese, also lived in Tremont. Like the other groups mentioned here, Arabs immigrated to America for its economic opportunities, but they were not escaping serious economic oppression or religious or political persecution. Their intention was to make a profit and return home for the status and privileges it would afford them. The vast majority settled in and around urban centers, with more than half located on the east coast. New York and Boston and large Arab settlements. (Today, the largest Arab-American community is in Detroit, Michigan.) The Cleveland Arab population totals 25,000 people. The local Arab community formed between 1895 and 1920. Due to small numbers of Arabs in Cleveland, no Arab community developed. Initially, several Arabs settled in the Central Market area, later moving to Tremont. As the community prospered, people moved further out. During the 1930's, the Zahle American Society Hall and the Syrian American Club were active in the Tremont area. In 1928 St. George Orthodox Church, a Syrian Antiochan congregation, purchased the Lincoln Park Methodist Church (1892).

RUSSIANS

Great Russians were not a large community in Cleveland, numbering about 5,000 people. Byelorussioans and Carpatho-Russians are more common locally. St. Theodosius Russian Orthodox Church was built by Carpatho-Russians. No Great Russian neighborhood evolved in Cleveland. The population was scattered throughout the city.

POST-WORLD WAR II

Rising wages of steel mills and other industry, the construction of low cost suburban housing, and increasing automobile ownership following the war gave people an array of housing options. In the post World War II era, the population of both Tremont and the entire city of Cleveland declined substantially. The Tremont Statistical Planning Area has dropped from a population of 36,686 in 1920 to 8,904 in 1990. Since the 1970's, industrial employment in Cleveland has declined substantially. As in the early days, Tremont is again isolated from downtown and the rest of the city, this time by freeways and inoperable bridges. Prior to the construction of the I-90 freeway (1959), W. 14th Street continued north to University Avenue. It now ends just north of Fairfield Avenue. Several houses, the Jennings Theater, and Martin Luther Church were demolished for the construction of the I-490 freeway near Clark Avenue. Several significant Queen Anne houses are still to be found on the street to the south of this point. With construction of I-71, Scranton Rd. became separated from the area traditionally considered Tremont. West 5th, 6th and 7th Streets, to the east of the district, were once densely packed with homes. Recently there has been substantially rehabilitation of several of the homes and business in Tremont. Lemko Hall has been converted into residential use. The Ukrainian Labor Temple and Jefferson-Gospel Press are now artists' studios. The ethnic makeup of the neighborhood now includes a substantial number of Appalachians and Hispanics.

BOUNDARY JUSTIFICATION

The Tremont Historic District boundary is defined by a combination of man-made and natural features. The District is bound on the east by the above ground I-90 Freeway. This man-made feature visually seperates the main part of Tremont from Scranton Avenue. The Tremont District's southern boundary is defined by the below grade I-490 Freeway and the Tremont Valley Playground, that lies approximately 90 feet below the grade of Tremont. There are several significant homes along West 14th Street, south of the freeway, that are not included as part of the nomination. Thurman Avenue and West 7th Street define the eastern boundary of Tremont. To the west of this line the housing stock remains largely intact, to the east there are a majority of vacant lots where demolition has occurred. The northern boundary of the district is University Avenue, where there is a 90 foot change in elevation.

AMENDMENT OVERVIEW

The original Tremont Historic District National Register nomination (listed 7/15/94) included an area of nearly 185 acres roughly bounded by University Avenue and the cliff above the Cuyahoga River Valley on the north, by Thurman Avenue and West 7th Street on the east, by the below grade Interstate 490 on the south, and by the above grade Interstate 90 on the west. The historic district included 1,025 contributing buildings and 98 non-contributing buildings made up of single- and multi-family housing and associated garages and outbuildings, commercial buildings, churches, and schools. With a Period of Significance of 1850-1940, the original district was listed under Criterion A and C for its "ethnic heritage, social history, and prominent examples of architecturally significant Eastern European churches. The area is significant for its association with the diverse ethnic groups that immigrated to Cleveland to work in the rapidly growing industrial flats of the Cuyahoga River. The dense fabric of the area, consisting primarily of a large stock of urban vernacular worker housing, early twentieth century commercial buildings, ethnic associated halls, and several prominent religious structures, communicates the district's association with this important period of Cleveland history. The churches designed in the Neo-Byzantine style clearly communicate the ethnic association of the area. These churches, along with the area's other high style churches, serve as prominent landmarks in the community."[1]

This amendment extends the end date of the Period of Significance from 1940 to 1963 to more fully reflect the impactful mid-20th century Tremont history, which saw continued waves of new immigrants moving into the neighborhood as well as large sections of the neighborhood wiped out for highway construction. While most of Tremont was physically developed by 1940, an important period in the neighborhood history occurred between World War II and the construction of the interstate highways that so significantly cut off the neighborhood, redefining its geography and the perceived boundaries. The highway construction resulted in wholesale demolition of acres of buildings beginning in 1963. The construction altered the topography of the neighborhood and created new neighborhood boundaries to the south and west. Extending the Period of Significance to 1963 allows the full story of Tremont to be recognized and reflects the physical neighborhood that most people in the Cleveland area have known for the last fifty years.

The boundaries of the existing historic district are not being changed but the Contributing and Non-Contributing building counts are being amended to reflect inclusion of significant buildings that were constructed after 1940 and before 1963, the new end date for the Period of Significance. The end date marks the year the State of Ohio began purchasing and demolishing properties for highway construction; the highways were completed in 1965.

SECTION 7 – DESCRIPTION OF ADDITIONAL RESOURCES

1. 2421-23 West 11th Street
Our Lady of Mercy Church and School Contributing
School Built: 1926; alterations 1948, c.1990
School Architect: Unknown
Church Built: 1948
Church Architect: Stickle, Kelly and Stickle

Our Lady of Mercy Catholic Church complex is located across from Lincoln Park in a neighborhood of churches, small commercial buildings, apartment building, and one- and two-family houses, the church and rectory are set back from the sidewalk with a grassy area between them. The church (Photos 0001-0003) is attached to the front, north end of the school building, creating an L-shape. Built in 1926, the two-story brick school (Photos 0004, 0005) was constructed over a full basement or hall, which served as the worship space for the congregation until the church was constructed in 1948. The church was built in front of the north end of the school and the front elevation of the school was faced in Tennessee crab-orchard sandstone to match the church. The rectangular school building has a clay tile hipped roof, aluminum replacement windows and doors (c.1990), and four classrooms on each floor with original blackboards and cloakrooms. Despite the alterations, the building retains its historic integrity and is in fair to good condition. The slate-roofed, gable-front church is constructed of Tennessee crab-orchard sandstone and features an inset semicircular entrance portal and rose window under a blind arch gable (Romanesque influence) and an octagonal bell tower with a copper cupola (Renaissance influence). While religious objects and stained glass windows were removed before the church closed in 2009, the sanctuary retains much of its historic appearance including mosaics, lighting and voluminous space. The vacant church retains a high degree of integrity and is in fair to good condition with isolated areas in poor condition.

2. 2425 West 11th Street
Our Lady of Mercy Rectory Contributing
Built: 1958
Architect: Unknown

The two-story, flat roof, brick rectory (Photos 0006, 0007) built over a full basement has original windows and doors and also features the use of Tennessee crab-orchard sandstone on the front elevation. The interior has central corridor on both floors with original doors, woodwork, stainless steel handrails and counter tops, and some bathrooms. The building reflects its construction era and is in good condition.

3. 2425 West 11th Street
Two-Car Garage - Our Lady of Mercy Contributing
Built: Unknown
Architect: Unknown

The two-car brick garage (Photo 0008) has a low shed roof and small brick and tile parapet, one modern wood overhead garage door, and two, eight-light steel sash windows. The garage is in fair condition.

4. 2425 West 11th Street
Four-Car Garage - Our Lady of Mercy Non-Contributing
Built: Unknown
Architect: Unknown

The four-car brick garage (Photo 0008) has a shed roof, pent overhang and four modern wood overhead garage doors. The garage is in poor condition.

5. 1050 Starkweather Avenue
Merrick House Settlement Contributing
Built: 1948-49; alterations c.1990
Architect: George S. Rider Co.

Originally located in a frame building on an adjacent W. 11th Street property, Merrick House Settlement (Photo 0009) was relocated into a new brick building completed in 1949 on the northeast corner of Starkweather and W. 11th Street. Constructed on land purchased by the Catholic Charities Corporation, Merrick House is an asymmetrical, flat-roof, two-story, brick building with a one-story brick ell, brick quoins, stone door and window surrounds, stone sills and window panels, a stone and brick foundation, and a wide flat entablature at the roof line. Windows, which have been replaced, appear singly and in bands. The double leaf entrance doors are metal replacements. A large brick chimney appears above the building at the rear of the property. The building retains its integrity and is in good condition.

6. 1050 Starkweather Avenue
Merrick House Settlement Garage Contributing
Built: c.1950
Architect: Unknown

A brick and concrete block, three-bay, flat-roof garage (Photo 0013) with a low parapet is located at the end of the east driveway, at the back of a paved area behind the adjacent building to the east of Merrick House. The brick wraps the front corners of the side elevations, which are constructed of concrete block. The garage door openings have brick lintels and the center opening is taller; all have modern doors. Noted in the original nomination as non-contributing, the garage is now contributing under the expanded Period of Significance.

7. W. 14th Avenue and Starkweather Avenue S.
Lincoln Park Pool Building Contributing
Built: 1953
Architect: Leon Worley, Damon, Worley, Samuels & Associates, Cleveland

Credited in the 1962 AIA Directory as the architect for the Cleveland City swimming pool program, the pool building (and pool) (Photos 14, 15) is one of ten designed by Leon Worley in 1953 under the direction of Mayor Thomas A. Burke, Planning Director James M. Lister, and Properties Director Arthur L. Munson. The architectural firm designed churches, public facilities, commercial, and multi-family structures. The painted brick building has an irregular, slightly slopping roof with a large overhang. Wood ventilator panels appear singly and in bans. Doors have been replaced. The pool building houses changing rooms and restrooms for boys and girls, and is in good condition. Noted in the original nomination as non-contributing, the garage is now contributing under the expanded Period of Significance.

8. 2346 W. 14th Street
Our Lady of the Angels/St. Joseph Center Contributing
Built: 1957; alterations c.1995
Architect: Unknown

The OLA/St. Joseph Center (Photo 0010) is a one-story, flat-roof, tan brick building with a two-story gymnasium near the rear of the building and an entrance that faces the side street off the parking lot. Replacement windows appear singly and in bands, which provide the only ornamentation on the building. The gymnasium pop-up also has banded windows that function as a clerestory. Built to serve the education and ministerial needs of the community, the building retains its integrity and appears to be in good condition.

9. 2307 W. 14th Street
Grace Hospital Contributing
Built: 1938; additions 1952, 1959
Architect: Herman R. Neff, George S. Rider Co., 1938
General Contractor: Albert M. Higley Co., 1938

Grace Hospital was built in three campaigns after being founded in a house on this same site in 1910. The middle section is the 1938 portion of the building, with the 1950s additions flanking either side. The simple three-story red brick, flat-roof building has regularly-spaced windows, which have been replaced, and stone sills, cornices, and parapet caps. A newer aluminum entrance and canopy have been added off the north corner of the building. Founded to serve the immigrant population in the neighborhood, the building is in good condition.

2071 W. 11th Street
Evangelical Baptist Church Contributing
Built: c.1960
Architect: Unknown

This simple one-story, rectangular building constructed over a raised foundation has a very low gable roof, decorative brick front facade, painted concrete block side and rear walls with regularly-spaced windows, and a central front entrance accessed from a raised porch centered on the entrance. The porch has aluminum supports; the porch and steps have aluminum railings, and the entire building sits behind a newer decorative aluminum fence. The building appears to be in good condition. Noted in the original nomination as non-contributing, the garage is now contributing under the expanded Period of Significance.

10. 2357 W. 10th Street
St. John Cantius High School Contributing
Built: 1949; alterations c.1960s
Architect: Ellsworth Potter
General Contractors: Woods and Chleva

St. John Cantius High School (Photo 0011) is part of the St. John Cantius Catholic Church complex located between W. 10th Street and Tremont Avenue on the west and Professor Avenue on the east. Built at the sidewalk over a raised basement, the two-story, flat roof, yellow brick building with stone sills, belt and string courses has two inset entrance bays on W. 10th Street. The entrance bays extend to the top of the second floor; entrance doors are sheltered by a simple, flat projecting canopy in each bay. Entrances have glass transoms and half-light doors, which appear to have been replaced when the windows were done; a single entrance appears to the north, a single and double-leaf entrance to the south. The original windows were removed and a combination of casement and glass block were installed c.1960. Above the center bay of the front elevation, a statue of Jesus sits on a stone pedestal within a round-arch stone niche that rises above the parapet and is ornamented with finals and modified stone buttresses. A one-story brick and stone addition appears on the north end of the building, set a bay back from the front elevation. While the original windows have been removed, the building retains its integrity and is in fair to good condition.

11. 2342 Professor Avenue Contributing
Built: c.1955; renovation c.2010
Architect: Unknown

This small, rectangular, commercial one-story, painted brick building (0012) sits at the sidewalk and has a clipped entrance bay to accommodate its corner lot. The double-leaf entrance has a glass transom and is inset under a stone entablature. Newer display windows sit on stone sills below new awnings. The building is in good condition and retains its integrity.

The original National Register nomination listed 23 garages/outbuildings that were constructed during the expanded Period of Significance. These buildings were considered non-contributing and have not been reevaluated as part of this amendment. Two additional buildings, Grace Hospital on W. 14th Street, and 2358 W. 11th Street, were also listed as non-contributing buildings due to age. Grace Hospital is now a contributing building in the district—its additions are within the new Period of Significance the history of the hospital both within the neighborhood and the greater Cleveland healthcare community is significant. The other noted building is still considered non-contributing.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Immigration and Nationality

Cleveland, known as a multicultural city, was settled by waves of immigrants, first from Europe, then from other continents as well. The Tremont neighborhood has been particularly known through the generations for its concentration of immigrants and how these newly-arrived residents revealed their religious and cultural backgrounds in the buildings they created.

During the 1930's through the 1960's, the Tremont neighborhood consistently showed a higher percentage of foreign born residents than Cleveland as a whole. In 1930, the U.S. Census showed that almost 40% of the white population in Tremont was foreign born (Figure 1), compared to almost 28% for Cleveland. The 1940's through the 1960's continued to illustrate this pattern of higher percentages of foreign born in the composition of Tremont compared to Cleveland, although the percentages declined over time. By 1970, the percentages of foreign born dropped considerably in the neighborhood and citywide to about 15% in Tremont and to approximately 12% in Cleveland.

The U.S. Decennial Censuses showed that the foreign born population in Tremont, while representative of a number of nationalities, predominately represented eastern European countries (see Figures 2 and 3, page 9-11).

Much like Cleveland and other urban centers that attracted large numbers of immigrants, Tremont experienced a somewhat changing group of nationalities, depending on the decade. The 1930 Census chronicled immigrants primarily from Poland (69.7%), and Czechoslovakia (18.7%). The 1940 Census however, showed lower percentages of immigrants from Poland (58.2%) and Czechoslovakia (13.1%), with a higher percentage of persons from Austria (14.3%). In 1950, the Census showed that the percentages of immigrants from Poland (49.3%), Czechoslovakia (9.6%), and Austria (10.8%), while still significant, were continuing to decline. In contrast, the percentage of immigrants from the U.S.S.R. more than doubled from the previous decade to 17.0%.

Beginning with the 1960 Census, the Census Bureau changed its methodology. Instead of "Foreign Born," which encompassed only the foreign-born population, the Census Bureau "combined the foreign-born population with the native population of foreign or mixed parentage in a single category termed 'foreign stock.' " In 1960, the Census showed that the highest percentages of persons in Tremont listed their country of origin as Poland (36.1%), Czechoslovakia (7.4%), Germany (6.5%), and the U.S.S.R. (19.9%). Finally, in 1970, the Census showed that the percentages of 'foreign stock' remained high for persons whose country of origin was Poland (32.9%), Czechoslovakia (7.8%), Germany (15.1%), and the U.S.S.R. (17.9%).

Building Construction

Very few buildings were constructed in Tremont during the 1940s and 1950s, due in large part to the intense development of the area in the late 19th and early 20th centuries—most land was developed by the start of World War II and any new construction meant the demolition of older buildings. It is interesting to note that some of the few post-World War II buildings are now some of the most notable in the neighborhood. These are institutional buildings that occupy prominent locations on the street and have not been altered substantially like many of the residential buildings around them. While many of the residential buildings retain their original forms and some the original porches, most have been altered with the addition of aluminum and vinyl siding, and replacement windows and doors. Notable institutional buildings include the former Our Lady of Mercy complex (#s 1-4), Merrick House Settlement (#s 5, 6), Our Lady of the Angels/St. Joseph Center (#8), and St. John Cantius High School (#11). Grace Hospital (#9), built in 1938, had two additions built in 1952 and 1959. And in 1953, a neighborhood institution was added, the Lincoln Park Pool Building (#7).

Our Lady of Mercy (#1) began "as an offshoot of St. Wendelin Parish. The Slovaks living in Tremont objected to traveling through the industrial valley [to the west] to St. Wendelin and wanted to establish their own parish. Though Bishop John P. Farrelly refused them permission, the Slovaks persisted. The Polish Nationalist pastor of Sacred Heart Church on W. 14th promised them a priest if they affiliated with the Polish National Catholic Church. They then organized the parish of St. John Baptist, which opened in 1915. The Polish Nationalist link drove many back to St. Wendelin's. Mounting problems finally forced the St. John parish to approach the Roman Catholic diocese for assistance. Bishop Joseph Schrembs agreed to accept the repentant congregation in 1922. Rev. Francis Dubosh was named pastor of the church, renamed Our Lady of Mercy. By 1927, when Fr. John W. Krispinsky became pastor, the congregation had grown from 60 to 326 families. It continued to grow, and, in 1942, the parish began a door-to-door collection to build a new church. By 1945 they had realized $50,000 toward their goal; construction began in 1948. The Romanesque-style church was dedicated on 23 Oct. 1949. The church's interior incorporates much of the Slovak peasant heritage, with a large mosaic featuring Mary, Our Sorrowful Mother, the patron of Slovakia."[2]

The congregation worshipped in the school (#2) basement until the church was built by the congregation more than two decades later in 1948-49. A rectory (#3) was constructed in 1958. The architectural firm of Stickle, Kelly and Stickle designed the church. The firm included Ray Stickle, John Sherwood Kelly and Robert Stickle. The firm designed several Roman Catholic churches including St. Williams in Euclid and the remodeling of St. John's Cathedral downtown.

The substantial number of immigrants created a need for various programs and services to ease the transition to America. Merrick House Social Settlement (#6) was founded in 1919 by the National Catholic War Council, a relief organization established during World War I, and named for Mary Merrick of Washington, D.C., founder of the National Christ Child Society. Part of a network of settlement organizations in Cleveland, Merrick's programs focused on citizenship, language, cultural, hobby, and recreational activities for immigrant residents of the neighborhood. During World War II, programs were changed to fit the demands of wartime. Nursery and daycare hours were extended, civil defense and first aid programs were added, scrap drives were held, and a victory garden was tended. Following the war, Merrick dedicated a new building in 1950 and expanded its programs, which were now also serving refugees and displaced persons being sponsored by the immigrants who arrived a generation earlier. Merrick House continues to operate today from their Tremont location.[3] The OLA/St. Joseph Center (#8) functioned in much the same way at Merrick House, and today provides a wide variety of services to residents including continuing adult education programs, Catholic Charities outreach ministries, and disability services.

While Merrick House assisted neighborhood immigrants with transition to the American way of life, Grace Hospital (#9) served their healthcare needs. Founded in 1910 on W. 14th Street, "Grace Hospital was the first small hospital in Ohio to be accredited by the American College of Surgeons. A small group of homeopathic physicians founded the hospital to fill a perceived need for a medical/surgical hospital on Cleveland's near south side, an area without a voluntary hospital."[4] The hospital was modernized in in the 1950s, becoming Grace Hospital Association in 1953 and constructing new wings in 1952 and 1959.

"The principal institutional developments in Cleveland hospitals between 1910 and 1950 included the emergence of the group-practice hospital, the move of several hospitals to the suburbs, and the advent of health insurance programs. The Cleveland Clinic Foundation, incorporated in 1921, was the first and by far the most successful group-practice hospital in Cleveland. It combined the practice of surgery and medicine with new diagnostic procedures and ongoing medical research. Organized as a not-for-profit foundation staffed by salaried physicians, the Cleveland Clinic overcame the onus heaped on group clinics by individualistic private practitioners who perceived a threat to the prevailing free-market economy in American medicine. By 1920, as noted in the Cleveland Hospital and Health Survey, local hospitals could be categorized according to the strength of their community orientation. One group, comprising Fairview Hospital St. John Hospital, Glenville Hospital, Lutheran Hospital, Provident Hospital, Grace Hospital, St. Ann's Hospital, and St. Alexis Hospital Medical Center drew the majority of their cases from their own vicinity. A second group, which included Huron Road, Lakeside, City, Mt. Sinai, St. Luke's, and St. Vincent's, no longer served just their immediate neighborhoods but drew patients from all regions of Cleveland. Together these last 6 hospitals contained 60% (1,812 beds) of the total capacity (3,088 beds) of the 20 hospitals belonging to the Cleveland Hospital Council (now Cleveland Hospital Association) in 1920. Several hospitals in this second group led the move toward the suburbs between 1915 and 1935. They were prompted by the need to renew aging physical plants and lured by locations closer to a middle-class clientele better able to pay for hospital care. Mt. Sinai initiated this relocation in 1916, moving to the present University Circle area. It was followed by Woman's General Hospital, Lakeside, Maternity (later MacDonald), and Rainbow hospitals, which had all opened new buildings adjacent to WRU by 1931. This first wave of urban flight culminated with the relocation of St. Luke's on Shaker Boulevard (1927) and Huron Road in East Cleveland (1935)."[5]

St. John Cantius High School (#11) was built as part of a Polish congregation organized in 1898. The parish's growth was rapid. Many of Cleveland's steelworkers and other laborers were Polish immigrants who had settled on the South side of the city. Masses were originally held in a two-story barn at the corner of Professor and College Avenues until a new church was constructed in 1926 (contributing in the original NR historic district). In addition to building a new church, education was a priority of the parish. These poor immigrants knew the importance of a good education. They wanted Catholic schools for their children and were willing to sacrifice to attain the best. St. John's fifth pastor, Right Reverend Monsignor Francis D. Duda, turned his attention to a parochial high school. The area had begun to grow. The Second World War was expanding industrial production; steel mills were creeping into the residential areas. The influx of workers caused overcrowding in the community's schools. Monsignor Duda planned the remodeling of the parish auditorium into high school classrooms which opened in 1945. When his assessment of the demand proved true, he decided that a complete high school and recreation center would be a vital addition. Monsignor added English Masses to the Polish in the post-World War II period. In 1947, Monsignor Duda employed architect Ellsworth Potter of Cleveland to draw the plans which were later approved. Contractors Woods and Chleva were hired and the work began. Cornerstone laying ceremonies were held on Sunday, July 10, 1949 and the building was dedicated April 16, 1950.[6] "J. Ellsworth Potter was born in Ashtabula. At sixteen he was the youngest county engineer in Ashtabula County. He was featured in an April 1912 issue of the Ohio Architect and Builder as the junior member of the Akron architectural firm of Haglock & Potter. He was a church and school architect with offices in Cleveland, Los Angeles, and Gary, Indiana. He was listed

Highway Construction

Steady population growth in urban areas during the early and mid-20th century, along with the advent of automobiles and trucks, strained local road networks. Nationwide motor vehicle registrations consistently increased during the same period (Figure 4):

Data available from the mid-20th century also illustrates that as motor vehicle registrations increased, vehicle miles of travel also rose. During the 25-year period, urban streets continued to account for approximately 45% - 50% of all vehicle miles of travel, even as total travel miles increased (Figure 5):

In 1939, the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads offered a plan for constructing a national highway system. In 1944, Congress and President Franklin D. Roosevelt approved construction of the Interstate Highway System but failed to appropriate funds to pay for construction. The ensuing debate in Cleveland and other cities focused on the potential of highways to serve urban renewal, assist the downtown economy, and speed up traffic.[8] Engineers, planners, and elected officials also needed to consider the significant out-migration of people from Cleveland to suburban communities that was underway. Local studies included the 1952 Cleveland, Ohio Metropolitan Area Traffic Survey, which was an origin-destination study, and a February, 1955 report by Knappen-Tippetts-Abbet-McCarthy outlining a proposed urban freeway system.[9]

Finally, in 1956 Congress and President Dwight D. Eisenhower approved a gasoline tax to fund the system, particularly the National System of Interstate and Defense Highways.[10] With a funding source available to pay 90% of total costs, routes were more definitively located. In December, 1957 the consulting engineering firm Howard, Needles, Tammen & Bergendoff, retained by the Cuyahoga County Engineer's Office, published the Corridor Report for Interstate and Alternate Routes in the Cuyahoga County Freeway System. The report noted that "those routes that are now or may later be placed on the Interstate Highway System were selected, their locations further refined and corridors adopted with primary consideration being given to traffic service afforded. . . ."[11]

Overall, the 1957 Corridor Report considered downtown Cleveland as the central location in Cuyahoga County and proposed five radial routes extending to the west (present day Interstate 90), southwest (present day Interstate 71), south (present day Interstate 77), southeast (not built), and northeast (present day Interstate 90). In addition, two bypass routes were proposed: an outer bypass in the eastern and southern portion of the County (present day Interstates 271 and 480), and an inner bypass route (only a small section built: present day Interstate 490).

The intersection of the southwest radial highway (present day Interstate 71) and the inner bypass (west end of present day Interstate 490) was placed in the Tremont neighborhood, physically splitting the neighborhood into four unequal parts. The Corridor Report noted that the "big interchange. . .is so situated as to minimize or eliminate the taking of any of the many churches and schools in that area." The disadvantage of that alignment however, was requiring the taking of "a number of residences to the west." [12] (Figure 7)

The highway location delineated in the 1957 Corridor Report remained in place during the design phase. Cuyahoga County Fiscal Office records show that the State of Ohio purchased properties primarily during the second half of 1963 and the first half of 1964. Highway construction occurred in 1965.[13]

An estimated 100 – 120 acres of land in Tremont was converted into highway right-of-way. The design, including elevated construction for Interstate 71 and a depressed construction configuration for Interstate 490, cut 300- to 400-foot wide swaths through the neighborhood, totaling 55 to 65 acres. The diamond-shaped interchange occupied a 2,600-foot by 1,800-foot area, or an additional 45 to 50 acres.

Tremont was greatly changed by the displacement of residents, businesses, and neighborhood institutions, as well as the repercussions of the physical alterations to the neighborhood. Many Tremont residents responded by participating in a nationwide trend in the 1950's and 1960's of moving from crowded central cities to new suburbs, following West 25th Street/Pearl Road southward[14] to new suburbs adjacent to Cleveland, such as Parma, Ohio.

Between 1960 and 1980, the overall neighborhood population plummeted from about 25,000 to 10,000, "as freeway construction and physical deterioration resulted in the demolition of hundreds of houses. The freeway construction also acted to further isolate the neighborhood, which already was separated from much of the rest of the City by the valleys of the Cuyahoga River and Walworth Run."[15]

CONCLUSION

Historically, the Tremont neighborhood of Cleveland has been an area associated with the diverse ethnic groups that immigrated to Cleveland to work in the rapidly growing industrial flats of the Cuyahoga River. The dense fabric of the neighborhood, consisting primarily of a large stock of urban vernacular worker housing, twentieth century commercial buildings, ethnic-associated halls, schools, settlement houses, and prominent religious structures, communicates the district's association with this important period of Cleveland history. While the influx of immigrants was significant before 1940, arriving immigrants continued to impact the neighborhood into the 1970s—church-affiliated schools and the services of settlement houses were still in high demand. Extending the Tremont Historic District's Period of Significance to 1963 more fully captures the mid-twentieth century immigrant story and memorializes the noteworthy and isolating physical changes the neighborhood endured, brought about by the building of the interstate highway system in the 1960s. Nearly 120 acres was lost to highway construction, which redefined the neighborhood and created the man-made boundaries we associate with Tremont today.
