"Long Moss" Plantation House
Madison County, Mississippi

7. DESCRIPTION

"Long Moss" Plantation House is a story-and-a-half Greek Revival planter's cottage located on Quail Road in Madison County, less than two miles from its original site on Mississippi Highway 43. The five-bay house was constructed of heavy pine framing on hewn oak sills circa 1844 by Colonel Richard Ivy Holliday, who left his signature on an interior stair wall. The original four-room gabled cottage consists of two front rooms separated by a center hall and smaller cabinet rooms to the rear, again separated by a back hall from which an enclosed staircase ascends to a loft. This structure was expanded quite early by the construction of a large gabled one-room addition to the west rear of the cabinet room and the attachment of a two-story "school room/kitchen" located behind the east rear cabinet room. Original exterior siding and a staircase serving only this section of the house provide evidence that this two-story extension was a detached structure at some point. What appears to have been another early dependency that was later attached to the house is connected to the southeast corner of the house and is a frame, gabled building. Photographs of the house taken in the 1930s document that these additions had already been made by that time.

The main (north) facade is fronted by a one-story gallery that rests on brick piers and has a wooden deck and box columns. The focal point of this facade is the original doorway that consists of a pair of 34-inch wide, six-panel entry doors flanked by five-pane sidelights over molded panels. Four nine-over-nine windows containing many of their original panes are protected by original working louvered shutters. The signature of a family member, A.A. Sanders, is etched on the exterior of one of these original panes.

The reconstruction of a small, severely deteriorated porch to the rear (south) facade was necessary to prevent water damage from reoccurring at a poorly-designed area where the two roof lines of the early west addition and the "school room" meet. The original pine weatherboard on the structure was repaired as were the box columns on the front porch and the chamfered porch columns at the rear. The exterior, shouldered brick chimneys in each gable end of the original house, as well as in the gable ends of the "school room" and southwest additions, were rebuilt using the one extant chimney as a guide. All surviving windows were repaired and those newly made were patterned after the old.

The interior includes a center hall, two front rooms and one cabinet room embellished with original 24-inch wide cypress wainscoting surmounted by a chair rail beneath planed pine board sheathing. Original doors, of both the paneled and batten types, are in place throughout the house. The westernmost front room has two original iron box locks in place. One is an open box lock. This cabinet room located behind the east parlor has board ceilings and walls above the wainscoting. The board walls retain the original blue painted surface that was found beneath layers of wallpaper and modern paneling. The westernmost rear room has its original mantel, moldings, doors and windows restored in place and its ceiling and walls are original unpainted pine sheathing.

The back hall contains a stairway that ascends to the "school room" at the eastern rear and also a doorway that leads to a short flight of steps down into a room below the "school room" that is now a kitchen. The interior of the "school room" remains as found with original casement windows, mantel, blue/green pine sheathing, and floors. The main closed staircase rises from the back hall area to an undivided loft with exposed pine pole rafters, wide plank flooring and small casement windows on either side of the chimneys.

Long Moss's architectural integrity is intact. In 1994, Long Moss was sold, and the new owner planned to demolish the plantation house to make way for a new house on the site. The house was bought by Mr. and Mrs. C. Mike Quick and moved to its present location in August 1994. In order to retain the original roof structure and to preserve the front porch, the house was cut into three sections: the rear southeast dependency was removed, and the house was cut in half down the center hall. The three sections were moved across country to the new site. Although moved, the house remains in Madison County less than two miles from its original site, which was a rural, heavily-wooded tract. The new location is on a rural, heavily-wooded, 40-acre tract that is very similar to the former location. A five-acre lake is directly north of the house, and a small formal garden has been laid out in the east side yard. Although the building lost integrity of location when it was moved, it retains integrity of design, materials, workmanship, and feeling. It also retains its rural setting.

Only the addition of a modern kitchen in the space below the "school room" and the inclusion of two bathrooms, one in a cabinet room behind the west front room and another concealed in the loft, have been added to the interior of the house. A laundry and storage area are now located in the attached dependency, which was a storage area before restoration. A closet was created within an existing side porch off the west rear addition. A small bathroom that had been placed in the rear hall some time ago was retained.

All remaining work consisted of repair of water damage, roofing the building, and the removal of modern 4x8 foot paneling and wallpaper that sheathed the interior board walls. All wiring and plumbing was replaced, and new central air and heating units were placed outside, with ductwork hidden beneath the floors.

8. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

"Long Moss" Plantation House is architecturally significant as a good example of rural vernacular Greek Revival architecture of the antebellum period. The house is a typical galleried planter's cottage with a center hall plan. Long Moss's added distinction is that well-constructed dependencies later became additions that over the years gained significance as a part of the whole. The house is also notable for displaying mid-nineteenth century construction techniques. Substantial hewn sills and corner posts were used in the construction of the house. The floor joists are sassafras timbers with only the upper surface hewn. Of special significance is the twenty-four inch wide wainscoting made from a single plank of hand-dressed cypress. This wainscoting is found in the more formal areas of the house.

Oral tradition places the "school room" at the center of the education of family members and neighboring children through many generations. Schools in this section of the county at the elementary level were private and often held in plantation homes. Such was the use of the "school room" at Long Moss. This is believed to be the only plantation schoolroom left extant in the county. (Although this building is related to the history of education in this vicinity, because more information is not available at the present time, Long Moss is not being nominated for significance in the area of education.)

Long Moss has a long history of association with one Madison County family, according to Beverly Martin (Buildings of Architectural Interest Project of the WPA). The plantation home remained in the same family for 150 years, from the time of its construction circa 1844 until 1994. Colonel Richard Ivy Holliday (1789-1857), the builder, and his wife, Mary (1792-1852), reared seven children. Col. Holliday fought in the War of 1812 with Col. Claiborne's regiment of the Mississippi Militia. In 1862, Thomas L. Holliday, son of Richard and Mary, enlisted in the Confederate Army in Canton. He served as a musician with Company C, 9th Regiment Mississippi Volunteers, at the rank of private. The graves of Richard, Mary, Thomas (died June 25, 1892), as well as that of Thomas' wife, Harriet Catchings Holliday (died January 4, 1910), are located in the family cemetery. Madison County Cemetery Records list the names of many other family members buried in the cemetery until 1912. (The family cemetery is located on Mississippi Highway 43 on the original tract and is outside the boundaries being nominated to the National Register.)

In 1994, Miss Eugenia Smith, the last member of the family to occupy Long Moss, died. Upon her death, the property was sold. The new owner planned to raze the house in order to build a new home, so Mr. and Mrs. C. Mike Quick purchased the house and moved it to its present site in order to save it. Although the building lost integrity of location when it was moved, it retains integrity of design, materials, workmanship, and feeling, and qualifies for listing in the National Register because of its architectural significance.
