The chicken house at the E.D. Maddox Farm is a single story, wood frame animal shelter. It features a rectangular plan, is supported by a continuous, cast concrete foundation and covered with a metal gable roof.

The western elevation contains the sole entrance into the building. It is placed just to the south of center, covered with a shed roof supported on brackets and surrounded by the novelty-sided wall. The northern elevation is also sheathed with novelty siding and lighted with a row of window openings that can be closed through the use of a horizontal wood "shutter" hinged at the top. The eastern elevation is blank, and the southern elevation is lighted with four six-over-six wood sash windows set into the distinctive, diagonally-framed wall. Two small chutes are placed at grade between the windows to the west.

The interior is also constructed from the diagonal framing seen on the southern elevation and divided into four rooms of chicken perches and one open room that is accessed by the western entrance. Doors lead into each of the perch rooms.

The most extraordinary feature of the entire building is the unique diagonal framing between the wood studs, inside and out. It is used for walls, doors and partitions to create a structure that is as visually dynamic as it is functional.

Continuation SheetSection number 8 Page 1Significance*Criterion C, local significance

The chicken house at the E.D. Maddox farm is significant by virtue of the extraordinary, open diagonal framing employed throughout the interior and one of the exterior elevations. This open design provided continuous ventilation for the chickens within and allowed for the more rapid dissipation of the odor from the manure. The selection of diagonal framing to accomplish this, however, especially considering all the mitering required, was certainly an attempt on the part of the builder to lend greater visual interest to an otherwise common farm structure. This chicken house stands as the only example of such construction and design from this era of White County history (Boom and Bust: The War and Depression Years, 1914-1939; Section E,4) in the entire county. It is in good condition.

Reviewer's Comments

The boundaries of this property are presently located along building lines. A resource listed in the National Register should include all features of the property which contribute to its significance. In almost all cases this includes its historic setting. Page 77 of National Register Bulletin 16, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, states that "the boundaries of buildings should include the land surrounding the building, unless the lot occupied by the building contains no surrounding land as in the central business district of most cities."

Please revise the boundaries to include the property historically associated with the resource. If a portion of the original setting has lost its integrity, please explain.
