Holly City Hall

Prowers County, Colorado

Section number 7 Page 1DESCRIPTION

The 1938 Holly City Hall is a one-story chalk stone building standing on the northeast corner of the intersection of Cheyenne and South Third Street. The building fronts south onto Cheyenne Street a half-block east of South Main Street. Landscaping consists of two spruce trees which flank the entrance walk off Cheyenne Street and a row of mature cottonwood trees along the edge of S. Third Street. A short concrete wall defines the edge of the property on all but the north side and flanks the broad steps leading to the facade entrance. A metal garage building which formerly sheltered the town's fire truck stands just to the northwest of the City Hall. A dirt driveway along the north elevation of the building accesses the garage.

The rectangular plan, 49 feet by 73 feet building with rear sloping roof rises from a concrete foundation. The walls are of locally quarried Niobrara chalk stone. The wall coping, sill and lintels are of locally quarried sandstone. The facade parapet steps up over the entry. The side walls step down from front to rear. The original wood frame windows remain and are primarily six-over-six, double-hung sash.

The symmetrical facade consists of a central entry containing a steel six-panel door surrounded by wood frame side lights and transom. Original lantern-like light fixtures flank the transom. The lintel contains painted lettering spelling "CITY HALL." Pilasters flanking the entry and at the corners divide the facade into three bays. Each side bay contains a pair of evenly spaced windows. The southeast corner contains a sandstone cornerstone incised with the words "CITY HALL" on the facade and the date "1938" on the east elevation.

The east elevation fenestration consists of five windows, a metal pedestrian door with covered transom, and a fiberglass roll-up vehicular door. The west elevation contains seven windows, the three northernmost being of smaller size. The north (rear) elevation is covered by stucco, a portion of which has failed. A metal gutter lines the roof edge. The downspouts are missing. Fenestration consists of four windows, the western-most of smaller size.

On the vacated interior, the main entry consists of a vestibule protected by the original three-vertical light swinging door surrounded by side lights and an operating transom. Interior walls throughout the building are primarily of dressed Niobrara chalk stone. Many of the original five-panel wood doors remain. The ceiling is composed of acoustical tile attached to the roof rafters and framing. Much of the interior lighting is provided by suspended egg-crate style fluorescent fixtures.

The hall leading from the main entry divides the building south to north. A second hallway from the east elevation entry divides the building east to west. Both halls have tile floors.

The large room in the southeast portion of the building once functioned as a community room. The approximately 19 ft. by 29 ft. office space retains its original wood floors. The stone walls and wood window frames show signs of deterioration. A 1987 wood frame wall separates the space from the adjacent former offices of the police department.

INTERIOR PLAN
Not to Scale

Across the hall from the former community room is the former library. The approximately 18 ft. by 38 ft. room retains its original wood floor. Some of the original wall mounted floor-to-ceiling bookcases remain in place. Others have been shortened resulting in damage to the stone walls. A small storage room is located off the library to the northeast. The room contains an original commode.

The hall from the east elevation entry provides access on the south to the police department and on the north to the garage. The west end of the hall forms the jail area, with holding cells opening to the north and south. The cells are currently used for storage by the town's administrative offices.

The former fire truck garage last functioned to house the town ambulance. The western portion of the garage was partitioned for the storage of medical supplies.

Two restrooms occupy space at the intersection of the two halls directly west of the police department offices.

Alterations

Exterior alterations include the replacement of the original three-light facade door with a six-panel steel door. Two west elevation library windows were boarded over in 1985. The steel east elevation pedestrian door and the roll-up vehicular door are replacements. The north elevation stuccoing occurred at an unknown date.

Original construction included a children's wading pool located just to the north of the building, now the driveway to the metal garage. The pool was removed at an unknown date.

On the interior, alterations include the 1987 shortening of the office/community room space; the partial removal of library shelving; and the circa 1970 partitioning of the garage space for medical supply storage.

The actions of weather, deferred maintenance, and intrusive tree roots have caused portions of the concrete foundation and walls to deteriorate and crack. Lack of proper drainage has discolored the stone on the upper wall surfaces. However, the building is structurally sound and with its minimal alterations, it remains fully capable of conveying its historical and architectural significance.

SIGNIFICANCE

The 1938 Holly City Hall is eligible for the National Register under Criterion A in the area of Social History for its association with the town's police and fire departments, library, and the activities of its multi-use community room. The building variously housed the municipal police department and jail, the volunteer fire department, truck and ambulance, and the public library. The community room hosted a wide variety of events ranging from club meetings, to parties and dances, to election polling. The building remained an active part of community life until 2000 when the last town agency, the library, relocated to another building. The Holly City Hall served effectively for over sixty years as an important center of town life.

The building is significant in the areas of Community Planning and Development and Politics/Government for having been constructed by the Depression-era Works Progress Administration (WPA) as a town sponsored project. As a relief and public works agency, the WPA completed hundreds of projects across Colorado to improve local, county and state infrastructure while providing meaningful work for many of the nation's unemployed. Southeast Colorado experienced both the general economic downturn of the 1930s as well as the additional financial and physical damage inflicted by the environmental forces of the Dust Bowl.

The Holly City Hall is also eligible under Criterion C for its architectural significance. The building typifies the simple but dignified designs used by the WPA for city hall and courthouse construction. The symmetrical stone building conveys a sense of importance without resorting to elaborate style or ornamentation. The success of the design and its execution by the WPA is borne out by the building's six decades of successful service.

CITY HALL

Holly's first administrative offices occupied space on Main Street. Subsequently, the offices moved to a private residence a block off of Main. The October 7, 1929, town council meeting minutes include a "motion moved and carried to rent the east room of the Simpson property for the town office, at the rate of $13.00 per month." No motivation is noted for the move from Main Street.

In 1932, the town obtained a $1,500 loan from the local First National Bank to secure a new building for the town offices. The land purchased was the east portion of the Simpson property, Lots 1 and 2, Block 11. The town constructed the building and it held the local government offices as well as the town board.

Town board meeting minutes indicate that the town intended to take advantage of the Works Progress Administration Depression-era federal construction program to consolidate the town offices and departments into a single facility just across Cheyenne Street to the north of the existing town office. The Works Progress Administration files cite Holly mayor W.A. Kirby as saying that the proposed city hall "will satisfy an acute public need. City expenditures for flood control, incidentally unsuccessful, render the town financially unable to construct [the] proposed building without aid. The convenient location of building material, its attractive appearance and easy working qualities contribute to the desirability of the project."

The January 26, 1938, project proposal to the WPA included construction of a city hall, associated landscaping, a wading pool, and a stone wall surrounding the site. R.E. Lowderblock, WPA labor foreman, requested the hiring of eighty men, plus one skilled mason and one skilled carpenter. Plans called for the building to be of Niobrara chalk stone which WPA workers would quarry with hand saws nine miles north of Holly.

The Niobrara is the upper formation of the Cretaceous period, embracing the latest division of Mesozoic time. The formation is composed of chalk and chalky shales. The chalky rock varies in color from buff to pure white and is generally too soft for use as a building material. The pure white specimens consist of pure carbonate of lime.

WPA state administrator Paul D. Shriver approved the project on July 11, 1938. The town agreed to pay $5,996 of the $17,736 project cost. The town also agreed to furnish trucks and other construction equipment. H.M. Thompson engineered the building design. J.M. Infield provided construction supervision as the WPA zone supervisor. Most of the WPA laborers were local residents.

The new city hall opened on September 18, 1938. Apparently residents and officials alike used the terms "town" and "city" interchangeably. No one seemed to puzzle over the Town of Holly having a City Hall. In the final September 19, 1938, inspection report, State Field Engineer Frank B. Page noted that the "building presents a very nice appearance and landscaping is excellent." Records indicate that the police department and volunteer fire department immediately occupied the new building. The police department used a single office and two jail cells while the fire department parked its truck in the garage. The library occupied its new space in about 1940. Surprisingly, the town administrative offices and board did not join in the exodus to the new building. The town board held meetings in the "council room" for a short period in 1943, but it soon returned to its old quarters across the street. Town board minutes do not indicate any reason for the temporary occupancy of the facility.

Despite the absence of the town administration, the City Hall immediately became the community center for many governmental and social services. In addition to its obvious informational and literary functions, the library served as a meeting place for the Civic Club, the board of the Fire and Ambulance District, and other small gatherings. The council space quickly became a community room and hosted such groups as the World War II Service Mothers, the Alpha Omega Club, two diet clubs, 4-H youth activities, the Holly Saddle Club, practices of the junior high cheerleaders, the volunteer ambulance organization, and meetings of the Girl and Boy Scouts. In addition, the community used the room for bridal and baby showers, parties, as a polling place, and for other town activities.

The volunteer fire department moved to a new building in 1972 and the town converted the truck garage for use by an ambulance. The police department relocated in 1998. The town formally vacated the City Hall building in 2000 after the library moved into the newly rehabilitated Santa Fe Railroad Depot (National Register listed). The depot now houses all of the municipal offices.

Section number 8 Page 7WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

President Franklin Roosevelt created the Works Progress Administration in July 1935 as a one of his diverse New Deal agencies designed to provide jobs for the nation's unemployed in worthwhile, modest scale, urban and rural public works projects. The independent agency, initially directed by Roosevelt's close friend and advisor Harry Hopkins, absorbed the older Federal Emergency Relief Administration public works program. The WPA hired men and women in both skilled and unskilled occupations.

The WPA most often worked jointly on projects with state agencies, county governments and municipal administrations. The agency constructed schools, libraries, community buildings, civic offices, and park structures. WPA workers participated in road, water, sewer, and other infrastructure projects that occasionally dovetailed with conservation and park projects performed by the Civilian Conservation Corps (CCC). In some cases, the WPA actually completed projects begun by the CCC. This was particularly true after 1939 when the military draft began to shrink the ranks of the CCC. The name of the agency was changed to Works Projects Administration in July 1939, when it became a division of the Federal Works Agency. Final projects were completed in early 1942 as the nation shifted to wartime production.

The WPA executed dozens of projects throughout southeastern Colorado, including Prowers County and Holly. The Lamar Daily News reported in 1939 that during the period from October 1, 1935 to January 1, 1939, the WPA carried out projects totaling $909,000 in Prowers County. Of this amount, the project sponsors (municipal governments, school districts, and county governments) provided $166,000. Wages to WPA workers constituted over $623,000 of the expenditures with remaining funds going to purchase materials, equipment and other non-labor items. In addition to the City Hall, the WPA constructed a large school gymnasium building in Holly. The gymnasium remains in use. In nearby Granada, WPA workers constructed a two-story school addition from the same chalk stone used in the Holly City Hall. Hartman's school benefited by a gymnasium addition, Wiley received a school agricultural building, and Lamar took pride in the construction of a building on the campus of Southeast Junior College, the erection of the Prowers County Poor Farm, the addition of a beautiful stone athletic stadium for the Lamar High School and improvements to Willow Creek Park. Numerous other WPA projects occurred throughout Prowers county including water and sewer systems, grasshopper control programs, and the widespread construction and improvement of county roads and bridges.
