DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Foley-Brower-Bohmer House is situated on a large wooded lot several blocks south of the central business district of St. Cloud. Formerly residential, the area in which the house is located has changed to a multi-use area because of the expansion of nearby St. Cloud State University.

The three storey brick residence was commissioned by lumberman-industrialist Timothy Foley in April of 1889. The architect was A.E. Hussey. Construction began in May of that year under the direction of contractor J.S. McCleary of Minneapolis. The building was completed in February of 1890 at a total cost of $13,000.

Stylistically, the residence is representative of the brick mode of the Richardsonian Romanesque style, popular in Minnesota during the 1880s and 1890s. Set on a foundation of rusticated local St. Cloud grey granite, the primary materials of construction consist of Saint Louis red pressed brick, red sandstone for lintels, sills, and carved panels, and wood frame interior structural system. The plan is irregular; projecting bays and porches, gables with stone copings and carved finials, fluted chimneys, and a round tower with conical roof contribute to the picturesque quality of the design. Walls are punctuated with a large number of windows, a number of which are either stained glass or curved glass.

Four alterations are evident on the exterior. The major alteration was the removal of a full-front spindlework porch on the front of the house in approximately 1945; the deck and brick column basis remain, however, as an open patio. One of the five chimneys was removed from the roofline with the sealing of one of the two fireplaces in the living room. A second-storey sleeping porch was added above the rear kitchen porch (west). Finally, the original slate roof has been replaced with asphalt composition shingles. With the exception of the removal of the front porch, however, these alterations are minor and have not altered the overall integrity of the design. The house has been excellently maintained.

On the interior, the first floor consists of a large hallway, living room, dining room, kitchen, and small bathroom. The hallway is finished in carved golden oak; a fireplace of brass and copper with oak mantel and tile hearth is situated in the northwest corner adjacent to the staircase. A double sliding door provides access to the living room from the hallway. This room is a large space created by the removal of a wall (and set of sliding doors) which formerly separated the parlor from the library. One of the fireplaces in the living room has been sealed and the mantel removed; the other fireplace retains its original mantel which is surmounted by an arched stained glass window. Woodwork is of cherry.

The dining room is finished in white oak and boasts an elaborate parquetry floor. This room also has an ornately carved mantel and stained glass windows. To the rear of the dining room is the kitchen area; this is also finished in oak. The former pantry has been converted into a bathroom.

The second floor consists of five bedrooms and a bathroom. Woodwork throughout the second floor is of golden oak similar to that found in the hallway. Two staircases provide access to this floor. Two of the bedrooms have fireplaces.

The third floor is primarily devoted to a large attic with a finished floor which may have been intended for dancing or other social activities. A small room off the attic is designated as the maid's quarters.

In general, the Foley-Brower-Bohmer House is a well preserved example of the Richardsonian mansion-type house constructed during the later years of the nineteenth century in St. Cloud. Other such residences in the St. Cloud area have either been extensively altered in appearance or use or have been demolished. This residence is one of the last remaining examples of its type to continue as a private residence.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Foley-Brower-Bohmer House is an excellent example of the Richardsonian Romanesque mode of architectural design as applied to large-scale residences during the latter part of the nineteenth century. Constructed for Timothy Foley in 1889 according to designs by architect A.E. Hussey, this structure is the only Richardsonian residence in the St. Cloud area to retain a substantial degree of original design integrity and continue to function as a single-family private residence.

Timothy Foley was one of four brothers who controlled a substantial lumber industry and sizeable railway interests during the latter part of the nineteenth century. The Foley brothers operated mills in Foley (named for the family), St. Cloud, Foreston, and Milaca; they also formed a construction company which was integral in the development of railroad lines throughout central Minnesota and the northwest. The house in St. Cloud was occupied by Timothy Foley from 1890 to 1895. After that date his brother, Thomas, occupied it until 1902.

In 1902, Ripley B. Brower, a prominent lawyer and politician in St. Cloud, purchased the house as his residence. He had opened a law office in St. Cloud in 1891, was a Republican elected State Senator in 1898, which office he held until 1905, and was city attorney for St. Cloud from 1916 through 1928. He resided in the house until 1923.

In 1923, William J. Bohmer, proprietor of the Melrose Granite Company, purchased the house from Brower. The granite company, with headquarters in St. Cloud, was reputed in the 1920s to be one of the largest granite producing plants in the United States. In 1927, Bohmer became director of the American National Bank of St. Cloud. He established the Bohmer Investment Company in 1931, and was also a director of the St. Cloud Chamber of Commerce.
